

MERSEY LEISURE PUBLISHING PRESENTS:

Adventure

THE SUPPLEMENTARY & SCIENCE FICTION GAMES MAGAZINE

90p
MARCH

Out & About:

BY JONATHAN BROWN FOR ANY FANTASY GAME

Recognition:

SCIENCE FICTION BY BRIAN LUMLEY

Cocoon!

A MIND ADVENTURE

WITH 250 WORTH OF GAMES!

Adventure

THE SUPERIOR FANTASY & SCIENCE FICTION GAMES MAGAZINE

PRICE INCREASE:
Next issue,
Adventure
goes up to 85p.
Sorry lads.

Editorial

I recently read the most dimly boring editorial (no, it wasn't in Adventure!), and it got me thinking, "What should an editorial be about?" Then I decided it should just be a meaningless piece of waffle to introduce the magazine. I know, I thought, I'll tell the readers about how boring an editorial can be.

From religion to spiders and insects this issue- I hope I'm not giving the game away, but if you've a phobia about arthropods, I'd leave this one well alone...

We have two fantasy scenarios to titillate your taste buds, and more supernatural horror from Mr. Lumley for your bedside enjoyment.

A wee peek at religious heresies to continue last issue's theme, and the controversial Women in Roleplaying and Voyages Beyond, both by our female correspondents.

Ste Dillon

CONTENTS

Issue #8 March 1987

SCENARIOS:	page
COCOON. _____	36.
A MERP adventure for character levels 1-10.
OUT &amp; ABOUT. _____	49.
The Ladybird Guide to Scatophagum.
ARTICLES:
WOMEN IN ROLEPLAYING. _____	10.
Part 3: Alternative Societies.
RECOGNITION. _____	18.
Supernatural Mythos horror by Brian Lumley
HERESY. _____	25.
A Look at Medieval/FRP religions.
VOYAGES BEYOND. _____	46.
More pearls of SF wisdom.
EDITORIALS:
ADVENTURER CLUB: _____	36.
The results of our cartoon competition.
SHQP WINDOW. _____	21.
Games, games and more games reviewed!
TOWN CRIER. _____	26.
Gossip, News and Insight.
FANZINES FOREVER. _____	29.
CLASSIFIED: _____	30.
Advertiser trading post.
LIVE BY THE SWORD. _____	32.
The Mersey Leisure Mail Bag.

All materials not considered advertising by the publishers remain © copyright: Mersey Leisure Publishing. Reproduction in whole, or part, is expressly forbidden save with prior arrangement and written agreement with Mersey Leisure Publishing unless otherwise stated.

Printed in the U.K. by Redwood-Burn. Trade Distribution through Diamond Magazine Distribution Ltd. Unit 1 Burgess Rd, Ivyhouse Lane, Hastings. East Sussex, TN36 4NR. TEL. No. (0424) 430422

Published by Mersey Leisure Publishing, 85 Victoria Street, Liverpool L1

All material published in this magazine is accepted for publication on the grounds that it is original work belonging to the individual contributor. It is also published with the belief that it is not illegal, obscene, defamatory, breach of copyright or grossly bigoted.

Mersey Leisure Publishing regret that they cannot be held responsible for any transactions arising from advertisements.

Editor: Stephen Dillon, B Sc. Administrative Assistant: Merle Graham. Illustrations: Robin Parry, Richard T. Dolan, P. Vicer and Hudson Shew. Cover Art: Richard T. Dolan. Contributors: Ian Marsh, Wendy Graham, Alex Brady, and Ben Goedeke.

Typesetting/inkwork: Merseyprint & Photographics. Graphic Design: Chris Goldsman, B.A. Colour Origination: Azale Photo Litho.

Cover Price: 80p. Trade enquiries only Tel: 051-664-8450

GAMES WORLD

UNCHAIN THE DEMONS...

Let slip the ungodly host with these ranges of premium games and figures

RAL PARTHA    ASGARD    GRENADIER    CITADEL
ESSEX    LASERBURN    TTG    MINIFIGS    GHO
GALLIA    TSR    WORKSHOP    WOTAN    I.C.E.
AVALON HILL    VICTORY    F.G.U.

and all leading RPG's & conflict games plus software for all home computers

Mail Order Welcome Post Free over £4.50
Access & Barclaycard - Phone 01-741 4467

GAMES WORLD

129 KING STREET HAMMERSMITH
LONDON W6 9JG PHONE 01-741 4467
NEAREST TUBE HAMMERSMITH LATE OPENING THURSDAY JULY 7.30

Axles Armies

25mm FANTASY ARMIES

£19.70 + £1.30 P&P

MEN OF THE ORIENT
6 Cavalry 18 Sorcerer 20
Polygons

MEN OF THE WEST
12 Cavalry 40 Infantry

GOLBIN
9 Magic Riders 57 Infantry

DWARFS
7 Cavalry 48 Infantry

ORCS
41 Infantry

HIGH ELVES
10 Cavalry 31 Infantry

UNDEAD
9 Cavalry 58 Infantry

SKELETON

BOAR FACE ORCS
60 Infantry

MEN OF THE EAST
6 Cavalry 30 Infantry

AMAZON

9 Cavalry 57 Infantry

Quantities correct at time of printing

The Guardroom

38 WEST ST., DUNSTABLE

Tel: (0582) 606041

2 miles from Junction 11 on the M1

The Gameskeeper

You can bank on us!

105 Cowley Road, Oxford
Telephone (0865) 721348

THE GAMESMASTER

SCOTLAND'S PREMIERE HOBBY STORES

EDINBURGH
13 Forrest Road,
Edinburgh EH1 2GH.
Tel: 031-226 3354

GLASGOW
536 Great Western Road,
Glasgow, G12 8EZ.
Tel: 041-334 1583

YOUR GATEWAY TO ADVENTURE

FANTASY GAMES UNLIMITED

240 Mineola Blvd. Mineola, N.Y. 11501 USA.

INC.

Authorized Distributors:

GAMES OF LIVERPOOL
89 Victoria Street, Liverpool, L1 4DG, England

TARGET GAMES

Frisman, S-100 56 Stockholm, Sweden

VENTURA GAMES

155-163 Wyndham St., Alexandria, NSW 2015, Australia

CITADEL

Muldenweg 41-43, 2000 Hamburg 26, W. Germany

JELUX DISCARTE

6 Rue de la Baume, 75006 Paris, France

FREEDOM FIGHTERS

£14.95

We've been invaded, and the invasion is successful! Military units may or may not be continuing the fight against the invaders, but violent battle of Freedom Fighters has the fight for freedom and liberty.

A unique concept in design allows the GameMaster to select the invader and choose the details of the situation faced by the Freedom Fighter.

The invader may be any of the following:
• Soviet and Warsaw Pact forces with Latin American allies.

• The "Martians" written about by H. G. Wells in a return visit - this time better prepared for Earth's secrets.

• A more recent and secret alien invasion where the invaders pretend friendship and gain control of government, which will culminate in a worldwide state of affairs.

All of these are only possibilities - other potential invaders could also be used, making the list endless.

☐ Non-Zovian

☒ Zovian

☐ Zovian

Year of the Phoenix

£13.95

It is 1997. You are a soldier of the United States Space Command, a member of the warrior elite. Backed by the most powerful nation on this earth, your job is to protect our interests in space.

But tragedy strikes. During a rescue mission at the space station America, a freak explosion tears you from your shuttle and plunges you through a time warp.

Stranded in the future, a future where our great nation fell to the enemy over two hundred years ago, you find your warrior's crew vowing to continue your fight for freedom. "Welcome to America, comrades..."

HUSHIDO

£8.95

The night was dark and the road deserted, as a lone traveller moved towards the lights of the village lower on the mountainside. He was Tokasi Benkei, samurai warrior. Gold glinted from the fittings of his katana. The woods hid their shadows. They were warriors, and hungry. They were also alive to his one. They attacked.

Adventures:

Valley of the Muirs £4.95

Takishido's Debt 95p

£9.95

FLASHING BLADES

Potential Adventures £4.95
High Seas £4.95
Cordoba's Fall £4.95
An Ambassador's Tale £4.95

A complete role playing game set in the era of the Three Musketeers. A world in which a man's courage and wit know no bounds. It was a time of adventure and intrigue in which the real interests of King and Cardinal played a deadly game across France and all of Europe. We prepared to be "...born with the gift of laughter and the sense that the world was mad."

SCIENCE FICTION Games & Supplements:

Space Opera RPG:
Space Opera Board Set	£10.95
Ground & Air Equipment	£4.95
Seal's compendium	£5.95
Seal's Compendium 2	£5.95
Space Marines	£5.95
Remember:
Write NCG 8436	£3.95
Revision 2	£3.95
Revision 3	£3.95
Fiasco in Paris	£3.95
Operation Persimone	£4.95
Agents in Rebellion	£4.95
Casino Galactica	£3.95
Star Wars:
Sector 1	£5.95
Sector 2	£5.95
Sector 3	£5.95
Sector 4	£5.95
Sector 5	£5.95
Sector 6	£5.95
Sector 7	£5.95
Sector 8	£5.95
Sector 9	£5.95
Sector 10	£5.95
Sector 11	£5.95
Sector 12	£5.95
Other Star Wars RPG:
Other Star Wars Set	£14.95
Millennium Year	£5.95
Board Games:
Galaxy Data	£5.95
Galaxy	£5.95
Star Explorer	£12.95

FANTASY Games & Supplements:

Dardevil RPG:
Dardevil Board Set	£12.95
Adventure 1	£3.95
Adventure 2	£3.95
Adventure 3	£3.95
Adventure 4	£4.95
Princess & Gentlemen RPG:
P&G Board Set	£14.95
Heart Of Oak	£5.95
King Over The Water	£4.95
Decision At Darbs	£3.95
Flashing Blades RPG:
Flashing Blades Box Set	£9.95
Paragon Adventures	£4.95
High Seas	£4.95
Central Jail	£4.95
Ambassador's Tale	£4.95
Swordbearer RPG:
Swordbearer	£12.95
Dever's Halls	£5.95
Land Of Adventure RPG	£9.95
Board Games:
Lords & Wizards	£7.95
Monks' Hall	£10.95
Dragon Trail	£12.95
Game Rules:
Runes & Spells	£4.95
Flash Gordon	£4.95
Rebel Armies of Hyppon Age	£5.95
Tyrannosaurs Wrecked	£3.95
Treasure Of The Lost Temple	£3.95
Memo RPG:
Memo Box Set	£5.95
Supplement 1	£3.95
Rhodesia	£3.95
PG World RPG:
PG World Box Set	£9.95
Underground Railroad	£4.95
The Hammer Shall Strike	£4.95
Cause For War	£4.95

Chivalry and Sorcery

£16.95

Sourcebook 1 £6.95
Sourcebook 2 £5.95
Swords and Sorcery £4.95

Chivalry and Sorcery is a role-playing game that deals with the age of legendary and of chivalry. It describes a realistic and fully conceived world based on the feudal setting which is the basis of myth and the fantasy tradition in literature. Its completeness and attention to detail is also legendary in the gaming world.

Adventures:

The Dragonized £3.95
The Songbirds £3.95

Adventures:

Operation Morpheus £5.95
Into The Realm £3.95
Empire Wars £3.95

AFTERMATH

The boxed set provides solid basic play mechanics that were over 2 years in playtesting. Rules provided for modern firearms, NBC weapons and protections, mutations, survival, high technology and more. The game allows the referee to decide the nature of the holocaust that destroyed the world in which play will occur. Aftermath is for 2-6 players and a referee. It is a role playing extension into a post holocaust world.

£19.95

Saturnalia with over 700 players is not only the largest single character P.B.M. game in the U.K., it's also the fastest growing.

Saturnalia offers scope for player referee interaction limited only by your imagination. It is forever expanding and improving and so is structured to allow even the actions of a beginner player to have a profound effect on the game as a whole.

A web of intrigue exists as player organisations vie for domination. A regular newsletter acts as an organ for player diplomacy, continually updating the games situation, including articles on religion, player tactics etc.

You too could enjoy the unique role playing experience offered by Saturnalia.

The start up and first two turns are FREE. It won't even cost you a stamp. P.S. subsequent turns will be at a competitive and will include postage both ways.

£1.50 each

To participate in what is probably the worlds largest Fantasy Campaign.

Return to:-

SLOTH ENTERPRISES

FREEPOST, SOUTHAMPTON, SO9 1BH.

Cheque/PO payable to:- "SLOTH ENTERPRISES"

gremlin miniatures

P.O. BOX 154, WEMBLEY, MIDDLESEX, HA0 3UG.

new year specials, post free

ORC ARCHER REGIMENT (25 FIGS) ONLY £10 SAVE £2.50
 ORC INFANTRY REGIMENT (25 FIGS) ONLY £10 SAVE £2.50
 WOLF PACK (25 FIGS) ONLY £10 SAVE £2.50 offer closes 10th february new sci-fi

SPM0 Mantis in power armour with jetpack standing 70p
 SPM1 Mantis in power armour with auto-cannon 50p
 SP4a Tigris with heavy laser 61
 SP4S Tigris Walked in battle armour £190
 SP4B MED-E-VAC TRUK £3.95
 SPV7 POLICE TRUK £3.95
 SP4B SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH VEHICLE £4.95

POSTAGE > 10%UK, 35%OVERSEAS, MIN 50p.

redesigned ORC Battering ram inc. 6 crew only £15
 post free

Tom from the twentieth century, hurled through the aether, to Dorm, a world gone mad. Manthroth has levelled the city of Kien. Rocans army; half man, half machine, marches on the keep of Dallask.

- * The ultimate play by mail system.
- * Real time play.
- * £5.00 for initial package and character generation.
- * £1.20 per game return.
- * All postage free.

Send £5.00 to

'The Laboratory'
Box 56,
19 Colbourne Street,
Swindon,
Wiltshire.
SN1 2BQ

Further Into Fantasy

Stand Alone Play By Mail

But hurry, for all hell is upon us!

Overseas Reader!

Please write first for details of postage

Adventurer Club

FREE TO ENTER COMPETITION!
FOR CLUB MEMBERS

miniature paints

This excellent range of specially formulated paints are now available by mail order to all UK Adventurer readers. Chemically designed and proven in practice, these cost just 70p. a jar (+20p P&P*), and are available in a wide range of colours:

- |                  |                   |
|------------------|-------------------|
| 1. Metal Primer  | 81. Yellow        |
| 2. Gloss Varnish | 81. Leather Brown |
| 3. Matt Varnish  | 82. Earth Brown   |
| 4. Black         | 83. Chocolate     |
| 5. White         | 91. Gold          |
| 6. Mid Grey      | 92. Silver        |
| 11. Grass Green  | 93. Bronze        |
| 12. Dark Green   | 94. Brass         |
| 21. Turquoise    |                   |
| 22. Mid Blue     |                   |
| 23. Royal Blue   |                   |
| 31. Violet       |                   |
| 32. Ruby         |                   |
| 41. Red          |                   |
| 51. Orange       |                   |
| 71. Flesh        |                   |

* Orders for 5 jars or more, postage free in the U.K. Orders for 10 jars or more will also receive this free miniature paint badge (UK only).
(Also available for 30p including P&P in the U.K.)

Get your free badge when you enrol as a full member of the Adventurer Club.
Illustrated by Robin Perry, these colourful badges are also available to Adventurer readers for just 40p, including P&P. (Available in U.K. only)

WIN
£50
WORTH OF GAMES!

C.O.M.P.E.T.I.T.I.O.N

Okay, Adventurer competition lovers! Once again, it's time to put on your best "designer heads" and enter our free competition! Yee kids, this time what we're looking for is your ideas for our Adventurer T-shirts. Don't worry too much if you're not a budding artist, as we will be getting Robin Parry to produce the finished artwork from your sketches, paintings, etc. All you have to do to enter is send any designs, logos or ideas for a T-shirt that YOU would like to be seen in. This competition is only open to full members of the Adventurer Club, so if you haven't joined yet, sign on the form below...

The Prize? The Club Member who, in our opinion, produces the best design idea, will win £50 worth of games, of your own choice! And a FREE T-shirt. Also, six (6) runners-up will be given a FREE six-issue subscription to Adventurer. Now how's that, eh?

Closing date for this competition is 31st. March, 1987, so get cracking! By the way, don't forget to fill in your name and address and Membership number, and provide us with a list of the games you would like to win! The name of the winners, and the best designs, will be printed in Adventurer #10.

Please rush me copies of the following:

I have enclosed a cheque/P.O. for £ _____ made payable to Mersey Leisure Publishing.

☐ I enclose £5.50 for a 6-issue subscription to Adventurer beginning with issue # _____

☐ I enclose £1.50 for membership to the Adventurer Club.

☐ I enclose 40p. for an Adventurer badge

☐ I enclose 30p. for a miniature paints badge

☐ Please send me paint Nos. _____ @ 70p. each.
Plus 20p. P&P, where applicable.

☐ House Of Oghulhu (Paperback) @ £5.50

☐ Hero Of Dreams (Paperback) @ £5.50

☐ " " " (Hardback) @ £14.95

☐ Ship Of Dreams (Paperback) @ £5.50

☐ " " " (Hardback) @ £14.95

☐ " " " (Deluxe) @ £24.95

Cut out coupon (or photocopy), or write and place your order to:
Adventurer Club, 85 Victoria Street, Liverpool L1.

Name: _____ Age: _____
Address: _____

More Deadly than the Male

Introduction.

After looking last issue at female characters in conventional settings and at non-human women, this time I want to look at a few different sorts of societies, which could be used to add variety to a campaign world, as well as giving a few surprises, not to say shocks, for some of the more complacent players; three types of matriarchal society and the 'Utopia' of a society without gender bias. It is important to remember that there can be a large range of degree in patriarchal and matriarchal societies. In the extreme, one sex may be held in virtual servitude and regarded as property rather than as people, (eg. ancient Sparta), but less extreme societies are likely to be the more common. Often the dominant sex profess that their role is protective rather than exploitative, (an aspect of Chivalry), but misogyny (hatred of women), or the opposite may still play a part under the surface.

In order to introduce a non-standard society into a world, it is usually necessary to provide some way of isolating that society from the rest of the world. Fiction abounds with hidden valleys, mysterious or even floating or flying islands, and the rest. Any of these would provide a suitable site. Often purely natural barriers will be perfectly adequate. Alternatively, what if the players were to discover that their own 'world' was just such an isolated society...? On the other hand, a matriarchal society may be strong enough to stand openly amongst the other nations, in which case its nature would be known in advance to outsiders. Of course, the reports are unlikely to be accurate... I always find feeding players false rumours (and having them believe them) one of the pleasures of refereeing.

I make no apology for the fact that these societies have few (but by no means no) historical precedents. I am not a simulationist gamer, but am interested in creating internally consistent, interesting backgrounds for roleplaying. History does provide a useful guide to basic human nature, and to what might 'work' as a society, but should not be followed slavishly. In a fantasy setting, magic and intelligent non-human races will both affect the nature of the society, opening up many new possibilities.

Another point to bear in mind is that no society should be totally 'one dimensional'. Any society should have quirks in its culture, unrelated to the main aspects that mark it out. These could include reverence for certain animals or plants, taboos over food or dress and the rest. Also, when playing characters born and bred in such societies, remember that they will find their society normal, and others defiant. As a referee, I usually find it helpful to spend some time 'thinking myself into a society' before I run it, so that I know how the people within it will respond.

1). The Role Reversal, or Amazon Society.

In this type of society, women take on all the traditionally 'male' roles, as soldiers, rulers and the rest, whilst the men adopt the 'female' roles of child care and home keeping. Men will be striving to attract women, looking for a protector and provider. They'll beautify themselves, and always expect women to take the lead in courtship. Women, on the other hand, adopt the 'male traits' of aggression and dominance. A whole society of Meggie Thatchers, in fact! (Of course, TOTAL role-reversal would only be possible if the men could actually bear the children. Since this would effectively turn them into women, it would simply result in the standard patriarchal society. A somewhat pointless exercise).

On the other hand this is perhaps the most common type of matriarchal society in fiction and films, (especially pulp fiction) and is the easiest to play. It is also the least interesting, since it is essentially the same as the patriarchal society, except that the other half of the population is in charge. However, such a society can still give characters entering from other lands a surprise. You can also have a certain amount of fun by making male NPCs fit the standard female stereotypes, as well as vice versa. Characters from such a society are likely to be horrified at the surrounding societies. They may well despise the women for allowing their men to dominate them so.

2). The AE Female Society.

This type of society has obvious problems, the principle one being reproduction. However, in a magic-rich world, it should not be beyond the wit of the GM to come up with a magical method of reproduction. Such a society will be very alien in feel. Think about how much of our society and culture is geared to attracting members of the opposite sex! What could take the place of this in such a society? Social contacts will be on some other basis than the need to meet the opposite sex. There may be greater creativity due to the loss of any direct means to procreate, so that art and literature flourish. Or perhaps society will feed back on complex rituals of etiquette, or on social games (role-playing, perhaps?). For that matter, perhaps the social structure will produce artificial divisions, so that social gatherings are designed to bring together Reds and Greens (or whatever), where the actual difference between the divisions is impossible for an outsider to determine.

Then there are many other things to consider. How is society organised? Are stable 'marriages' formed between women? Or is there some different social structure? Society could be totally communal, with everyone living in large hearths, or it could be totally individualistic, with all members of society living alone (this is less lively - everyone needs some human contact).

Are any members of the society, even if just the rulers, aware that men exist elsewhere? What is their attitude to men? Are they remembered with fondness or as monsters? Much will depend on the history of the society. If the men were wiped out in some disaster, then they might be remembered with fondness, or regarded as purely mythical. On the other hand, a society founded by women who rebelled against or fled from their men would be likely to have tales of men as evil monsters. Either way, the image they have of men is likely to be so distorted by time that they may not even recognise them if they meet them. In the first case they would be looking for angels, and in the second, demons. Few male adventurers would fit either. Also worth considering is the attitude of these women to women from the outside world. They might well react negatively if women are seen to be subservient to their menfolk. Careless actions might spark a crusade to liberate the women in the rest of the world.

Similarly, do the surrounding lands have rumours of the land 'in the Mountains', (or wherever)? How do the men in the surrounding lands regard these stories? The women might seem as inhuman and un-natural demons, or as a 'challenge' to their 'masculinity'. They might well seek to prevent their women learning these stories. How do the women react to the rumours? A possible series of encounters could involve a group of women seeking this supposed Utopia, whilst being pursued by their menfolk.

It is common in fiction and films for (mainly male) writers to assume that women in such society will automatically fall in love with the first men to enter their lend in 'n' hundred years. I'm sorry to disappoint all those male egos out there, but this is extremely unlikely, not to say illogical. To women who are used to seeing only other women, and who do not associate men with procreation, men would seem like members of a different species. They may be friendly or unfriendly, perhaps even 'cute' or interesting, but how many of us would fall in love with a Gorilla? An interesting, if somewhat controversial, fictional all-female society is 'Whilseway', in Joanne Russ' 'The Female Men'. 'Whilseway' certainly makes an interesting contrast to the paranoia of works like John Wyndham's 'Consider Her Ways'!

The mirror image of this is, of course, the all-male society. Here we are on firmer ground, as we have more material to draw on. Besides the various societies in the real world which virtually exclude women from participating in them, we have such institutions as public schools and (until recently) the armed forces. Such societies appear to be both highly hierarchical and competitive, and invariably emphasise military virtues. On the other hand, they could put great emphasis on honour and team-spirit, as well as self-reliance and achievement. For a truly nightmarish account of such a world, again see Joanne Russ' 'The Female Men'. It need not, though, necessarily be any more nightmarish than an all-female society, but the unpleasantness is likely to be of a different nature, perhaps in a lack of compassion or mutual support.

3). The Status Reversed Society.

This is perhaps the most confusing society for characters from a male-dominated one, simply because it may appear on the surface to be a totally conventional patriarchal society. Men are seen doing most of the heavy labouring work, they also seem to form the middle forces of the society. However, talking to members of this society can be a little disconcerting. The default pronoun is 'she' rather than 'he'; the heads of families are women, men frequently being referred simply as so-and-so's husband, a successful scheme or operation may be described as going from 'subtlety to subtlety', rather than 'strength to strength', and warriors command little or no respect. In contrast, men speak with respect (and sometimes a little envy) of the feminine skills of child rearing and house keeping. A few may seek to imitate female dress and mannerisms, and be regarded either as 'getting above themselves', or with a degree of tolerance. Gradually it is noticeable that all positions of authority are held by women.

To take an example from our own campaign, consider the island of Soddhor, one of a small group of islands known as the Eastern Isles. Soddhor was first settled when a group of women fled a long running war between two of the other islands. They were led by a great and wise sorceress, Anases Soddhor, and under her guidance the small group of women and children set up a society in hiding.

Anases realised that her people needed power if they were to defend themselves once the neighbouring states stopped fighting each other. She therefore set about training her people in the arts of sorcery. Other women, and a few men (deserters from both sides), joined them, but men who wished to stay had to accept that the women would be in charge. For Anases believed that the male virtues of physical courage and aggression and competition were responsible for the constant warfare in the region. She believed that a better society would be formed if feminine values were dominant in it, and she saw subtle magic, diplomacy and outright cunning as the keys to success.

When, many years later, the war finally ended, Soddhor was already a growing community, with defences based on magic and diplomacy.

Now, some 200 years on, Soddhor is a powerful force in the island group. It never gets involved in physical combat between the other islands, but her diplomats and spies are skilled at playing the islands off against each other, whilst the island itself remains at peace. The other islands know of the great magical power on the island and Soddhor is keen to remind them of the danger should this fall into the hands of one of the other islands. This has led to the long-standing peace, which is seen by the island's inhabitants (of both sexes) as proof of the superiority of female rule. Why, let men get too much power, and they start fighting each other! Look at the other islands! Women, who are the bearers of the next generation, and have greater compassion and gentleness, are clearly better suited to run things than men. Giving birth to and bringing up children are clearly the most important functions in society, and the goddesses have given these roles to the most important sex. It is only right that those who care for the next generation should be the ones with the political power to decide what sort of world today's children will inhabit. Men are too ready to let their heads rule their hearts; they do not have the understanding of the natural world a woman has, for they do not listen to their emotions, only their minds.

Warriors, of all types, whether male or female, have low status in Soddhorian life. It is a low status profession, suitable for men. No well born or civilised woman would want training in arms. Just as in feudal societies, young noblemen will gain training in arms, virtually all well born, and a good many not so well born young women on Soddhor have some training in magic. In these studies they learn the superiority of subtlety over strength, the well timed suggestion or illusion over the lightning bolt or fire ball, and how to turn the enemy's apparent strengths into weaknesses.

Throughout the islands there are rumours of the great power of the beautiful and deadly 'witches of Soddhor'. Agents of Soddhor on other islands are skilled at using these weaknesses against them. They are quite capable of using sexuality as a weapon. Many are trained courtesans or (in D&D terms) bards, and are the mistresses of powerful men on other islands.

Despite all this, however, the position of men is better than that of women in some male dominated societies: they may own land, and a few even study the magical arts, if they can pass censors tests set by the Guild leaders. However, crimes against women, such as rape, carry the most severe penalties. Violence of all kinds, no matter how noble or 'justified' is despised as the 'last refuge of the incompetent': the fact that it still occurs occasionally is a sign of how far their society still falls short of the ideal.

A society such as Soddhor has many possibilities for scenarios. For players who role play well and are prepared to talk to NPCs, setting a comparatively straightforward search or mystery type scenario within such a society should provide an interesting role-playing experience, with plenty of opportunities for mis-understandings and social gaffes. Alternatively, the party could find themselves being used in a Soddhorian sponsored scheme on some other island. Try to avoid using this society purely as a source of villains: there is much that is good in Soddhorian life. Individuals within the society will be as varied as from any other society. For example, a man from Soddhor might be horrified by the levels of violence common in many standard fantasy societies, and thus become a fanatical advocate of female rule!

4). The Unbleeded Society.

This is, perhaps, the most difficult society to set up. It is basically one in which everyone is treated on their merits, whether they are male or female. In a totally unbiased society, for instance, inheritance (including titles and position) will be via the eldest child of either sex, or will otherwise treat the sexes equally. However, such a society need not mean that there are no differences between men and women: either it would recognise and value equally the special qualities of both. Women could still be feminine (although not automatically submissive) whilst men could still be masculine (although not automatically dominant). Similarly, such a society would not have preconceived ideas about what roles were suitable for men and women, the effeminate man and the masculine woman would both find it easier to be accepted in such a society. The best fictional example of such a society that I know of is the world of Vonda McIntyre's "Dreamscape", where equality is a product of the fact that both sexes have total control of their own fertility.

As with any Utopia, the scenario possibilities arising directly from this aspect of such a society are somewhat limited. A Utopia is a lovely place to live, but would be extremely dull in game terms. (Of course, other aspects of the society need not be so perfect). A party could be involved in protecting it from an outside threat or the like, but the main use in gaming terms is probably to provide a safe haven or an interesting background for characters.

Bibliography.

A number of books touch on this subject. Below are just a few that are worth looking at.

Andre Norton's 'Witch World' books are probably the best known 'status reversal' society in fiction.

Vonda McIntyre is a good writer for unbiased societies. 'Dreamscape', is really Science Fantasy, but has a very 'Fantasy Feel'. Also, her contribution to the 'Thieves World' set, 'Looking for Seten', ('Shadows of Sanctuary'; Penguin), is an excellent description of the responses of people from an unbiased society to a standard low fantasy one, (and vice versa).

All female societies: Firstly two dreadful ones, prime examples of how not to do it. Paul Anderson's 'Virgin Planet', a mixture of male sexual ego-tripping and paranoia, and John Wyndham's 'Consider Her Ways' (Penguin), purely male paranoia. One that I find more interesting, although certainly controversial, is Joanne Russ's 'The Female Man' (Women's Press). Not an easy read, but well worth the effort.

The descriptions of 'Whiteway' evoke a fascinating society. The descriptions of 'Menland' and 'Womanland' are both equally nightmarish. Buy it for the man in your life!

Finally, two books which certainly relate to the subject, although I'll leave it to the reader to make what they can of them. Firstly, Ursula Le Guin's 'Left Hand of Darkness' (Orbit Books), set on a world of one sex, neither male or female, but both. This is science fiction rather than fantasy, but gives two fascinating, multi-dimensional societies in some detail. The second is James Tiptree's 'Up the Walls of the World' (published by Pan). As well as being a superb science fiction novel, it includes a society where the men are responsible for child-rearing, yet which is still patriarchal.

I'm afraid all the books I've been positive about were written by women (James Tiptree is a pseudonym for a woman writer). I've probably missed some good examples by male writers, but I know of none. Perhaps some writers could accept the challenge...

BEYOND VOYAGES

In reply to Wendy Graham's comments in Star Trek #8, and to let you know how biased I am, my reaction of Harken Ellison was the result of pure personalism. I happen to believe that Mr Ellison was seriously slighted by TV. He spent six months watching his dream turn into a nightmare at the hands of a Canadian production company, and as one of the great contemporary SF writers, deserves as much exposure for his other TV work as possible, if only as recompense for this. He did, after all, write the finest Star Trek episode ever made!

I wasn't affording bias in Voyages Beyond in general; the trouble is that Wendy's column was actually biased against SF. If V8 is an American Touché white site, then the four guide missed the Acropolis, St. Peter's and the Louvre, spending all her time in buses and hotel lobbies instead.

Assuming that the column was aimed at 'the man on the Cleopatra omnibus', devoting almost half of it to TV was absurd; he's already going to be familiar with TV SF, and anyway, television represents the lowest common denominator of the genre. The people responsible for commissioning TV programmes see SF as light (juvenile) drama involving actors in shiny suits being chased around by people in rubber alien costumes.

You can get a pretty good idea of how TV editors SF have the experiences of Harken Ellison, who was approached ("We want the top SF writer in the world") to write an SF TV series.

He was no stranger to the medium (having worked on Star Trek, The Outer Limits, The Man From U.N.C.L.E. and a couple of other US series) and realising that the producers wanted a pretty basic SF plot, suggested an old standard.

After several centuries of travel, the crew of a generation starship go into a bit of a decline and end up forgetting that they are in a ship at all. The ship is going to crash into a star. One 'crew member' discovers the awful truth, gets chased around a bit, and finally saves everyone.

Ellison called it The Starlost. The TV producer was stunned, so funny rubber suits, no space rays. This was obviously the greatest work of original genius since Leonardo invented the helicopter. Harken had his own TV series!

After the ubiquitous delays and a myriad of personnel changes, Starlost went into production. By the time it reached the small screen, there was little left of his vision (even the pilot episode had been changed from Phoenix without Ashard to the dazzlingly original 'Voyages of Discovery') that Ellison refused to allow his name to be used in the credits, to protect his royalties he insisted they use the pseudonym 'Gretchen Birf instead'.

Starlost was an abridged disaster, but some indication of what it might have been can be drawn from the fact that Ellison's original script (not the defunct version that was finally filmed) won the Writers Guild of America Award for the Most Outstanding Film/TV screenplay of 1974. Accepting the award, Harken offered the advice 'If the ***** want to rewrite you... Rewrite!'

Starlost was an extreme example of the relationship between TV and SF, but the same bias towards the least innovative, most mediocre, exists in almost all TV treatments of the genre. Quite honestly, in a 3000 word history, TV SF doesn't warrant mention.

SF fans rather better at the cinema and some excellent SF films like up (Dark Star, Solaris, A Clockwork Orange, etc.), but are usually overshadowed by the much less interesting 'blockbusters'. The trouble with a blockbuster is that it costs so much to make, it simply can't afford to fail. In order to 'assume' success, all the bad old clichés that are assumed to guarantee 'bums on seats' are rolled out!

Rayley Scott's 'Bleed Runner' is generally agreed to be one of the better big budget SF movies (I've even seen it described as a flawless masterpiece) and is ostensibly based on Philip Dick's novel 'The Android Dream of Eleanor Sheen'. If you actually read the book, you'll discover that part of the film's plot belongs to a completely different story (Dick's 'We can build you'), and the whole occasion has been better told on the mould of a sub-Chandrasekhar detective story. All that really remains of the original is Dick's drooping San Francisco, brilliantly realised by conceptual artist Syd Mead. It's not that 'The Android Dream' wouldn't have made a perfectly good movie as it was, just that it doesn't mirror the Hollywood stereotype of SF.

No explanation of SF would be complete without some mention of cinema, but with very limited space, it's sufficient to simply list a representative film from each of the last few years (let's say, 'Invasion of the Body Snatchers' for the '60s, 'Star Wars' for the '70s, most of Adventure's readers have almost certainly seen them anyway).

Literature is by far the most important SF media, and the most difficult to define. With a 3000 word limit, you might just manage a list of notable SF writers and their key books. The subject is simply too broad for any short analysis to be worthwhile. Even of nearly 300,000 words. Trillion Year Spree, Brian Aldiss's history of SF only devotes a few lines to several important authors. In short, I think Wendy's brief was at fault, the task set was probably impossible.

Unluckily, Voyages Beyond hasn't really improved since issue #8, it seems to be an uncritical stance of 'society' and Star Trek columns, with book reviews running a very poor third. The 'society' bit surely belongs in Teen Crier, and if you really want a Twinkle column, why not call it that and be done with it? Starlost deserves a decent book review spot, and at that point, at least V8 in #6 is far better than any previous, but the rest of the column is still a bit of a non-event.

Just to lan the flames: TV again off with two more definitions of SF. Brian Aldiss's much quoted conversation starter 'Huckle discovered by nemesis' (the conversations usually start: 'Where the hell is the dictionary?') and Frederik Pohl's unimpeachable conversation stopper 'It's that thing that people who understand science fiction point to, when they point to something and say 'There's Science Fiction!'

BY NIC COATES

Must get some gear! I know!
I'll go to Games Unlimited.

Role Playing Games.
Fantasy Miniatures.
Board Games.
War Games.

Games Unlimited

2 Castle Street Kingston Upon Thames
01-549 5485

SHOP GUIDE:

*Indicates those with MAIL ORDER facilities.

LONDON:

Leisure Games.
The North London
Specialist games shop
91 Ballards Lane,
FINCHLEY, N3
01-346-2327*

NORTH WEST:

Games of Liverpool.
3 floors of specialist products
50-54 Manchester St,
LIVERPOOL L1 6ER
051-227-1505*

THE SOUTH:

Peterborough Role-Games.
The only adventurers refuge open on a Sunday.
WHITTLESEY,
NR Peterborough,
Cambs.

Games
25-27 Grange Rd. West,
BIRKENHEAD,
Merseyside
051-647-4676

WALES:

Armchair Adventures.
14 Market Arcade,
High Street,
NEWPORT, Gwent.
0633 843155

NORTH EAST:

Games
Unit 30
Merrion Centre
LEEDS 2
0532-426326

denizen

NEW RELEASES

FA54 Female Fighter with sword 42p
FA55 Mounted Paladin with sword
(captioned with horse) £1 35
FA56 Mounted Cleric whirlingstar
(armoured captioned horse) £1 35
BPS Space Cop with pistol 42p

PLUS A new range of gross and grotesque Goblins sculpted for us by Paul Stevens. Nine figures including Shaman, Standard Bearer, Swordsman,
Archer etc., all at 42p each

PAP Up to 2.50-25p Over £2.50 add 10%

DENIZEN MINIATURES, 4a Powis Square,
Brighton, East Sussex BN1 3HH

PBM - ARCADIA !!

ARCADIA - A fast action, fantasy, 30-player postal game; computer modulated. Ideal for both novice and expert. Each game of Arcadia runs for approximately two years. Players compete to dominate the land, either as a sole player or through alliance.
Starting in a location of your choice, players set out to explore, seeking great treasures, strange magic, artifacts of great power, cities and other players.

However you're not alone, remnants of a once great empire and GODS watch your every move, ready to aid or hinder you at any moment

SET-UP costs £5.00, covering rule book, wall map, city indicators, three free towns and Freepost. Turns cost £1.50 every ten days, no extras, and Freepost.

Apply to order to:
JADE GAMES, FREEPOST, Southsea, Hants, PO4 2BR
Cheques / P.O. payments JADE GAMES

Do you take the risk and play ARCADIA?

SPIRIT OF ADVENTURE

REAL LIFE ROLE-PLAYING IN THE NORTH-WEST OF ENGLAND

Send SSAE for booking form & details

NOW!

To: Steve Gibson/Steve Turnbull, 1 Scarisbrick Rd, Burnage, Manchester, M19 2BT

OTHERWORLD ARTIFACTS

25mm gaming and modelling accessories
Look to authentic mini-based settings
All prices shown here include post & packing

Box prices from SET 1: Dungeon £17.00
Set 2: Temple £17.00

Free mould & giant fungi, part of SET 3: 'Forbidden Caves' £11.00

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

Over 100
Over 100
Over 100

DAGON

For readers of the Cthulhu Mythos and Players of Call of Cthulhu

Spawned Bi-monthly. A 6 issue subscription costs only £5. Inside you will discover the eldritch lore and dark secrets of the Great Old Ones. Scenarios for Call of Cthulhu, background information on Lovecraft and his stories, all the latest news concerning Call of Cthulhu and a regular column by Sandy Petersen.
48 pages of arcane lore. Price 85p (incl. P&P).

Subscriptions and orders available exclusively from:
Carl Ford, 11 Warwick Road, Twickenham,
Middlesex TW2 6SW.

Winner of the GAMESDAY AWARDS
1985 and 1986
for BEST AMATEUR GAMES MAGAZINE.

WHAT'S STIRRING?

ISSUE #1

Great New Mag
Professionally produced with devastating art work 16 page pullout AD&D scenario, and all the benefits of Laboratory membership. The dark forces are rising, and so the time is right for the chosen few. Send Now! 60p & SAE, to find out "What is stirring"
THE LABORATORY
19 COLBOURNE ST
SWINDON
WILTSHIRE
SN1 2EQ

PRINCE AUGUST

NEW FANTASY MONSTERS

- G11 Standing Dragon & Victims £5.95
- G12 Flying Dragon £12.15
- G13 Storm Giant (Kuchinashi) £3.95
- G14 (L) Warm Lord on Giant Lizard & Armoured One Rider on Giant Lizard £11.15

Available from Hobby Shops or direct from Prince August (UK) Ltd,
Small Dale,
Hartfield BN8 9BC
Sussex,
UK

NEW FREE POSTER
A Giant dragon-like monster in full glory, showing off its amazing powers. It's yours for free!
Just send 4p SAE to receive poster

RECOGNITION

BY BRIAN LUMLEY

I

'As to why I asked you all to join me here, and why I'm making it worth your while by paying each of you five hundred pounds for your time and trouble, the answer is simple. The place appears to be haunted, and I want rid of the ghost.'

The speaker was young, his voice cultured, his features fine and aristocratic. He was Lord David Marriot, and the place of which he spoke was a Marnot property: a large ungainly, mongrel architecture of dim and doubtful origins, standing gaunt and gloomily atmospheric in an acre of brooding oaks. The wood itself stood central in nine acres of otherwise barren moors borderland.

Lord Marnot's audience numbered four: the sprightly octogenarian Lawrence Deinford, a retired man of the cloth; by contrast the so-called 'mediums' Jonathan Turnbull and Jason Lavery, each a 'specialist' in his own right, and myself, an old friend of the family whose name does not really matter since I had no special part to play. I was simply there as an observer - an adviser, if you like - in a matter for which, from the beginning, I had no great liking.

Waiting on the arrival of the others, I had been with David Marriot at the old house all afternoon. I had long known something of the history of the place... and a little of its legend. There I now sat, comfortable and warm as our host addressed the other three, with an excellent sherry in my hand while logs crackled merrily in the massive fireplace. And yet suddenly, as he spoke, I felt chill and uneasy.

'You two gentlemen,' David smiled at the mediums, 'will employ your special talents to discover and define the malignancy, if indeed such an element exists; and you sir,' he spoke to the elderly cleric, 'will attempt to exorcise the unhappy creature?' - once we know who or what it is.' Attracted by my involuntary agitation, frowning, he paused and turned to me. 'Is something troubling you, my friend...?'

'I'm sorry to have to stop you almost before you've started, David,' I apologised, 'but I've given it some thought and - well, this plan of yours worries me.'

Lord Marnot's guests looked at me in some surprise, seeming to notice me for the first time, although of course we had been introduced, for after all they were the experts while I was merely an observer. Nevertheless, and while I was never endowed with any special psychic talent that I know of (and while certainly, if ever I had been, I never would have doubted), I did know a little of my subject and had always been interested in such things.

And who knows? - perhaps I do have some sort of sixth sense, for as I have said I was suddenly and quite inexplicably chilled with a sensation of foreboding that I knew had nothing at all to do with the temperature of the library. The others, for all their much-vaunted special talents, apparently felt nothing.

'My plan worries you?' Lord Marriot finally repeated. 'You didn't mention this before.'

'I didn't know before just how you meant to go about it. Oh, I agree that the house requires some sort of exorcism, that something is quite definitely wrong with the place, but I'm not at all sure that you should concern yourself with finding out exactly what it is you're exorcising.'

'Hm, yes, I think I might agree,' Old Deinford nodded his grey head. 'Surely the essence of the, harumph, matter, is to be rid of the thing - whatever it is. Er, not,' he hastily added, 'that I would want to do these two gentlemen out of a job - however much I disagree with, harumph, spiritualism and its trappings.' He turned to Turnbull and Lavery.

'Not at all, sir,' Lavery assured him, smiling thinly. 'We've been paid in advance, as you yourself have been paid, regardless of the results. We will therefore perform - as Lord Marnot sees fit. We are not, however, spiritualists. But in any case, should our services no longer be required?' He shrugged.

No, no question of that; the owner of the house spoke up at once. 'The advice of my good friend here has been greatly valued by my family for many years, in all manner of problems, but he would be the first to admit that he's no expert in matters such as these. I, however, am even less of an authority, and my time is extremely short; I never have enough time for anything! That is why I commissioned him to find out all he could about the history of the house, in order to be able to offer you gentlemen something of an insight into its background.'

'And I assure you that it's not just idle curiosity that prompts me to seek out the source of the trouble here. I wish to dispose of the property, and prospective buyers just will not stay in it long enough to appreciate as many good features! And so if we are to lay something to rest here, something which ought perhaps to have been laid to rest long ago, then I want to know what it is. Damn me, the thing's caused me enough trouble!

'So let's please have no more talk about likes and dislikes or what should or should not be done. It will be the way I've planned it.' He turned again to me. 'Now if you'll be so good as to simply outline the results of your research...?'

'Very well,' I shrugged in acquiescence. 'As long as I've made my feelings in the matter plain...' Knowing David the way I did, further argument would be quite fruitless; his mind was made up. I rifled through the notes lying in my lap, took a long pull on my pipe, and commenced.

'Oddly enough, the house as it now stands is comparatively modern, no more than two hundred and fifty years old; but it was built upon the shell of a far older structure, one whose origin is extremely difficult to trace. There are local legends, however, and there have always been chronicles of tales of strange old houses. The original house is given brief mention in texts dating back almost to Roman times, but the actual site had known habitation - possibly a druidic order or some such - much earlier. Later it became part of some sort of fortification, perhaps a small castle, and the remains of earthworks in the shape of mounds, banks, and ditches can be found even today in the surrounding countryside.'

'Of course the present house, while large enough by modern standards, is small in comparison with the original, it's a mere wing of the old structure. An extensive cellar - a veritable maze of tunnels, rooms, and passages - was discovered during renovation some eighty years ago, when first the Marnots acquired the property, and then several clues were disclosed as to its earlier use.'

'This wing would seem to have been a place of worship, of sorts; for there was a crude altar-stone, a pair of ugly, tortoise-like basins, a number of particularly repugnant carvings of gargoyles or 'gods', and other extremely ancient idols and bric-a-brac. Most of this iconoclasm was given into the care of the then curate of the antiquities section of the British Museum, but the carved figures were defaced and destroyed. The records do not say why...

But let's go back to the reign of James the First.

Then the place was the seat of a family of supposed nobility, though the line must have suffered a serious decline during the early years of the seventeenth century - or perhaps fallen foul of the authorities or the monarch himself - for its name simply cannot be discovered. It would seem that for some reason, most probably serious dishonor, the family name has been erased from all contemporary records and documents!

Prior to the fire which razed the main building to the ground in 1618, there had been a certain intercourse and intrigue of a similarly undiscovered nature between the nameless inhabitants, the de la Poers of Echam Priory near Anchester, and an obscure esoteric sect of monks dwelling in and around the semi-ruined Faldstone Castle in Northumberland. Of the latter sect: They were wiped out utterly by Northern raiders - a clan believed to have been outraged by the 'heathen activities' of the monks - and the ruins of the castle were pulled to pieces, stone by stone. Indeed, it was as well destroyed that today only a handful of historians could ever show you where it stood!

As for the de la Poers, well, whole cycles of ill-omened myth and legend revolve around that family, just as they do about their Anchester seat. Suffice it to say that in 1923 the Priory was blown up and the cliffs beneath it dynamited, until the deepest roots of its foundations were obliterated. Thus the Priory is no more, and the last of that line of the family is safely locked away in a refuge for the hopelessly insane.

It can be seen then that the nameless family that lived here had the worst possible connections, at least by the standards of those days, and it is improbable that they brought about their own decline and disappearance through just such traffic with degenerate or ill-advised cultists and demonologists as I have mentioned.

Now then, add to all of this somewhat tenuously connected information the local rumours, which have circulated on and off in the villages of this area for some three hundred years - those mainly unspoken fears and old wives' tales that have sufficed since time immemorial to keep children and adults alike away from this property, off the land and out of the woods - and you begin to understand something of the awe of the place. Perhaps you can feel the awe even now? I certainly can, and I'm by no means psychic.

Just what is it that the locals fear? Turnbull asked. 'Can't you enlighten us at all?'

'Oh, strange shapes have been seen on the paths and roads; luminous nets have appeared strung between trees like great webs, only to vanish in daylight; and, yes, in connection with the latter, perhaps I had better mention the barreliefs in the cellar.'

'Barreliefs?' queried Lavery.

'Yes, on the walls. It was writing of sorts, but in a language no one could understand - glyphs almost.'

'My great-grandfather had just bought the house,' David Mamot explained. 'He was an extremely well read man, knowledgeable in all sorts of peculiar subjects. When the cellar was opened and he saw the glyphs, he said they had to do with the worship of some strange deity from an obscure and almost unrecognized myth cycle. Afterwards he had the greater area of the cellar cemented in - said it made the house damp and the foundations unsafe.'

'Worship of some strange deity?' Old Denford spoke up. 'What sort of deity? Some lustful thing that the Romans brought with them d'you think?'

'No older than that,' I answered for Lord Mamot. 'Much older. A spider-thing.'

'A spider?' This was Lavery again, he snorted the words out almost in contempt.

'Not quite the thing to sneer at,' I answered. 'Three years ago an aging but still active gentleman rented the house for a period of some six weeks. An anthropologist and the author of several books, he wanted the place for its solitude, and if he took to it he was going to buy it. In the fifth week he was taken away raving mad!'

'Eh? Harumph! Mad, you say?' Old denford repeated me. I nodded. 'Yes, quite insane. He lived barely six months, all the while raving about a creature named Atlech-Nache - a spider-god from the Chubu Cycle of myth - whose ghostly avatar, he claimed, still inhabited the house and its grounds.'

At the Turnbull spoke up. 'Now really?' he spluttered. 'I honestly fear that we're rapidly going from the sublime to the ridiculous!'

'Gentlemen, please!' There was exasperation now in Lord Mamot's voice. 'What does it matter? You know as much now as there is to know of the history of the troubles here - more than enough to do what you've been paid to do. Now then, Lasterie.' He turned to Denford. 'Have you any objections?'

'Harumph! Well, if there's a demon here - that is, something other than a creature of the Lord - then of course I'll do my best to help you. Harumph! Certainly.'

'And you, Lavery?'

'Obeyance? No, a bargain is a bargain. I have your money, and you shall have your noises.'

Lord Mamot nodded, understanding Lavery's meaning. For the medium's talent was a supposed or alleged ability to speak in the tongue of the ghost, or the possessing spirit. In the event of a non-human ghost, however, then his mouthings might well be other than speech as we understand the spoken word. They might simply be - noises.

'And that leaves you, Turnbull.'

'Do not concern yourself, Lord Mamot,' Turnbull answered, flicking imagined dust from his sleeves. 'I, too, would be loath to break an honourable agreement. I have promised to do an automatic sketch of the intruder, an art in which I'm well practised, and I'll go as well I shall do just that. Frankly, I see nothing at all to be afraid of. Indeed, I would appreciate some sort of explanation from my friend here - who seems to me simply to be doing his best to frighten us off! He inclined his head inquiringly in my direction.

I held up my hands and shook my head. 'Gentlemen, my only desire is to make you aware of this feeling of mine of... yes, premonition! The very air seems to be imbued with an aura of -' I frowned. 'Perhaps disaster would be too strong a word.'

'Disaster?' Old Danford, as we has wont, repeated me. 'How do you mean?'

'I honestly don't know. It's a feeling, that's all, and it hinges upon this deere of Lord Marmot's to know his foe, to identify the nature of the evil here... Yes, upon that, and upon the complicity of the rest of you.'

'But -' the young Lord began, anger starting to make itself apparent in his voice.

'At least hear me out,' I protested. 'Then -' I paused and shrugged. 'Then... you must do as you see fit.'

'It can do no harm to listen to him,' Old Danford pleaded my case. 'I for one find all of this extremely interesting. I would like to hear his argument.' The others nodded slowly, one by one, in somewhat uncertain agreement.

'Very well,' Lord Marmot sighed heavily.

'Just what is it that bothers you so much my friends?'

'Recognition,' I answered at once. 'To recognise our - opponent? - that's where the danger lies. And yet here's Lavery, all willing and eager to speak in the thing's voice, which can only add to our knowledge of it; and Turnbull, happy to fall into a trance at the drop of a hat and sketch the thing, so that we may all know exactly what it looks like. And what comes after that? Don't you see? The more we learn of it, the more it learns of us!'

'Right now, this thing - ghost, demon, god, apparition whatever you want to call it - lies in some deathless limbo, extradiemensional, manifesting itself rarely, incompletely in our world. But to know the thing, as our lunatic anthropologist came to know it and as the superstitious villagers of these parts think they know it - that is to draw it from its own rightful place into this sphere of existence. That is to give it substance, to participate in its materialization!'

'Hah! Turnbull snorted. 'And you talk of superstitious villagers! Let's have one thing straight before we go any further. Lavery and I do not believe in the supernatural, not as the misinformed majority understand it. We believe that there are other planes of existence, yes, and that they are inhabited; and further that occasionally we may glimpse alien areas and realms beyond the ones we were born to. In this we are surely nothing less than scientists, men who have been given rare talents, and each experiment we take part in leads us a little further along the paths of discovery. No ghosts or demons, or, but scientific phenomena which may one day open up into whole new vistas of knowledge. Let me repeat once more, there is nothing to fear in this, nothing at all!'

'There I cannot agree,' I answered. 'You must be aware, as I am, that there are well documented cases of...'

'Self-hypnosis!' Lavery broke in. 'In almost every case where medium experimenters have come to harm, it can be proved that they were the victims of self-hypnosis.'

'And that's not all,' Turnbull added. 'You'll find that they were all believers in the so-called supernatural. We, on the other hand, are not...'

'But what of these well-documented cases you mentioned? Old Danford spoke up. 'What sort of cases?'

'Cases of sudden, violent death?' I answered. 'The case of the medium who slept in a room once occupied by a murderer, a stranger, and who was found the next morning strangled - though the room was windowless and locked from the inside! The case of the exorcist,' (I paused briefly to glance at Danford, who attempted to seek out and put to rest a certain grey thing which haunted a Scottish graveyard. Whatever it was, the monster was legended to crush its victims' heads. Well, his curiosity did for him! He was found with his head squashed flat and his brains all burst from his ears!'

'And you think that all of -' Danford began. 'I don't know what to think,' I interrupted him, 'but certainly the facts seem to speak for themselves. These men I've mentioned, and many others like them, all tried to understand or search for things which they should have left utterly alone. Then, too late, each of them recognized... something... and it recognized them! What I think really does not matter; what matters is that these men are no more. And yet here, tonight, you would commence just such an experiment, to seek out something you really aren't meant to know. Well, good luck to you. If for one want no part of it, I'll leave before you begin.'

At that Lord Marmot, solicitous now, came over and laid a hand on my arm. 'Now you promised me you'd see the thing through with me.'

'I did not accept your money, David,' I reminded him.

'I respect you all the more for that,' he answered. 'You were willing to be here simply as a friend. As for this charge of heart... At least stay a while and see the thing underway.' I sighed and reluctantly nodded. Our friendship was a bond sealed long ago, in childhood. 'As you wish - but if and when I've had enough then you must not try to prevent my leaving.'

'My word on it,' he immediately replied, briskly pumping my hand. 'Now then: a bite to eat and a drink, I think, another log on the fire, and then we can begin...'

The late autumn evening was settling in fast by the time we gathered around a heavy, circular oak table set centrally upon the library's parquet flooring, in preparation for Lavery's demonstration of his esoteric talent. The other three guests were fairly cheery, perhaps a little excited - doubtless as a result of David's plying them unstintingly with his excellent sherry - and our host himself seemed in very good spirits; but I had been little affected and the small amount of wine I had taken had, if anything, only seemed to heighten the almost tangible atmosphere of dread which pressed in upon me from all sides. Only that promise wrested from me by my friend kept me there; and by it alone I felt bound to participate, at least initially, in what was to come.

Finally Lavery declared himself ready to begin and asked us all to remain silent throughout. The lights had been turned low at the medium's request and the spitting logs in the great hearth threw red and orange shadows about the spacious room.

The experiment would entail none of the usual paraphernalia beloved of mystics and spiritualists; we did not sit with the tips of our little fingers touching, forming an unbroken circle; Lavery had not asked us to concentrate or to focus our minds upon anything at all. The antique clock on the wall ticked off the seconds monotonously as the medium closed his eyes and lay back his head in his high-backed chair. We all watched him closely.

Gradually his breathing deepened and the rise and fall of his chest became regular. Then, almost before we knew it and feeling as something of a shock, his hands tightened on the leather arms of his chair and his mouth began a silent series of spastic jerks and twitches. My blood, already cold, seemed to freeze at the sight of this, and I had half risen to my feet before his face grew still. Then Lavery's lips drew back from his teeth and he opened and closed his mouth several times in rapid succession, as if gnashing his teeth through a blind, idiot grin. The only lasted for a second or two, however, and soon his face once more relaxed. Suddenly conscious that I still crouched over the table, I forced myself to sit down.

As we continued to watch him, a deathly pallor came over the medium's features and his knuckles whitened where he gripped the arms of his chair. At this point I could have sworn that the temperature of the room dropped sharply, abruptly. The others did not seem to notice the fact, being far too fascinated with the motion of Lavery's exposed Adam's apple to be aware of anything else. That fleshy knob moved up and down the full length of his throat, while the column of his windpipe thickened and contracted in a sort of slow muscular spasm. And at last Lavery spoke. He spoke - and at the sound I could almost feel the blood coagulating in my veins!

For this was in no way the voice of a man that cracked, hissed and gibbered from Lavery's mouth in a - language? - which surely never originated on this world or within our sphere of existence. No, it was the voice of... something else. Something monstrous!

Interposed with the insane cough, whistle and stutter of harshly alien syllables and cackling cinnations, occasionally there would break through a recognizable combination of sounds which roughly approximated our pronunciation of 'Atlaeh-Neechee'; but this fact had no sooner made itself plain to me than, with a wild shriek, Lavery hurtled himself backwards - or was thrown backwards - so violently that he overturned his chair, rolling free of it to thrash about upon the floor.

Since I was directly opposite Lavery at the table, I was the last to attend him. Lord Marriot and Turnbull on the other hand were at his side at once, pinning him to the floor and steadying him. As I stalked joined them I saw that Old Danford had backed away into the furthest corner of the room, holding up his hands before him as if to ward off the very blackest of evils.

With an anxious inquiry I hurried toward him. He shook me off and made straight for the door.

'Danford!' I cried. 'What on earth is -' But then I saw the way his eyes bulged and how trembly he trembled in every limb. The man was frightened for his life, and the sight of him in this condition made me forget my own terror in a moment.

'Danford,' I repeated in a quaver tone of voice. 'Are you well?'

By this time Lavery was sitting up on the floor and staring uncertainly about. Lord Marriot joined me as Danford opened the library door to stand for a moment facing us. All the blood seemed to have drained from his face, his hands fluttered like trapped birds as he stumbled backwards out of the room and into the passage leading to the main door of the house.

'Abomination!' he finally croaked, and no sign of his customary blarney! 'A presence - monstrous - ultimate abomination - God help us.'

'Presence?' Lord Marriot repeated, taking his arm. 'What is it, Danford? What's wrong, man?'

The old man jugged himself free. He seemed now somewhat recovered, but still his face was ashen and he trembled unabated. 'A presence, yes,' he hoarsely asserted, 'a monstrous presence! I could not even try to expel... that! And he turned and staggered along the corridor to the outer door.

'But where are you going, Danford?' Marriot called after him.

'Away,' came the answer from the door. 'Away from here. I'll - I'll be in touch, Marrist - but I cannot stay here now." The door slammed behind him as he stumbled into darkness and a moment or two later came the roar of his car's engine.

When the sound had faded into the distance, Lord Marrist turned to me with a look of astonishment on his face. He asked: "Well, what was all that about? Did he see something, d'you think?"

"No David," I shook my head, "I don't think he saw anything. But I believe he sensed something - something perhaps apparent to him through his religious training - and he got out before it could sense him."

We stayed the night in the house, but while bedrooms were available we all chose to remain in the library, nodding fitfully in our easy chairs around the great fireplace. For one was very glad of the company, though I kept this fact to myself, and I could not help but wonder if the others might not now be smiling apprehensively.

Twice I woke with a start in the huge quiet room, on both occasions finding the red-glowing fire. And since that blaze lasted all through the night, I could only assume that at least one of the others was equally restless...

In the morning after a frugal breakfast (Lord Marrist kept no retainers in the place; none would stay there, and so we had to make do for ourselves), while the others powdered about and stretched their legs or idled themselves up, I saw and took stock of the extension. David, concerned about the aged clergyman, rang him at home and was told by Danford's housekeeper that her master had not stayed at home overnight. He had come home in a leering rush at about nine o'clock, packed a case, told her that he was off 'up North' for a few days' rest, and had left at once for the railway station. She also said that she had not liked his colour.

The old man's greatcoat still lay across the arm of a chair in the library where he had left in his frenetic hurry of the night before. I took it and hung it up for him, wondering if he would ever return to the house to claim it.

Lavery was baggy-eyed and dishevelled and he complained of a splitting headache. He blamed his condition on an overdose of his host's sherry, but I knew for a certainty that he had been well enough before his dramatic demonstration of the previous evening. Of that demonstration, the medium said he could remember nothing; and yet he seemed distinctly uneasy and kept casting about the room and staring at the slightest unexpected movement, so that I believed his nerves had suffered a severe jolt.

It struck me that he, surely, must have been my assistant through the night; that he had spent some of the dark hours tending the fire in the great hearth. In any case, shortly after lunch and before the shadows of afternoon began to creep, he made his excuses and took his departure. I had somehow known that he would. And so three of us remained... three of the original five.

But if Danford's unexplained departure of the previous evening had disheartened Lord Marrist, and while Lavery's rather premature desertion had also struck a discordant note, at least Turnbull stood straight and strong on the side of our host. Despite Old Danford's absence, Turnbull would still go ahead with his part of the plan; an earnest could always be found at some later date, it such were truly necessary. And certainly Lavery's presence was not prerequisite to Turnbull's forthcoming performance. Indeed, he warned no one at all in attendance, desiring to be left entirely alone in the house. This was the only way he could possibly work, he assured us, and he had no fear at all about being on his own in the old place. After all, what was there to fear? This was only another experiment, wasn't it?

Looking back now I feel a little guilty that I did not argue the point a little further with Turnbull - about his staying alone in the old house overnight to sketch his automatic portrait of the unwanted tenant - but the man was so damned arrogant to my way of thinking, so sure of his theories and principles, that I offered no slightest opposition. So we all three spent the evening reading and smoking before the log fire, and as night drew on Lord Marrist and I prepared to take our leave.

Then, too, as darkness fell over the oaks crowding dense and still beyond the gardens, I once again felt that unnatural oppressiveness creeping in upon me, that weight of unseen energies hovering in the suddenly stifling air.

Perhaps, for the first time, Lord Marrist felt it too, for he did not seem at all indisposed to leaving the house; indeed, there was an uncharacteristic quickness about him, and as we drove away in his car in the direction of the local village inn, I noticed that he involuntarily shuddered once or twice. I made no mention of it, the night was chill, after all...

At the Traveller's Rest, where business was only moderate, we inspected our rooms before making ourselves comfortable in the snug. There we played cards until about ten o'clock, but our minds were not on the game. Shortly after ten thirty, Marrist called Turnbull to ask if all was going well. He returned from the telephone grumbling that Turnbull was totally ungrateful. He had not thanked Lord Marrist for his concern at all. The man demanded absolute isolation, no contact with the outside world whatever, and he complained that it would now take him well over an hour to go into his trance. After that he might begin to sketch almost immediately, or he might not start until well into the night, or there again the experiment could prove to be completely fruitless. It was all a matter of circumstance, and chances would not be improved by useless interruptions.

We had left him seated in his armchairs before a roaring fire. Close at hand were a bottle of wine, a plate of cold beef sandwiches, a sketch pad and pencils. There lay on an occasional table which he would pull into position directly in front of himself before sleeping, or, as he would have it, before 'going into trance'. There he sat, alone in that ominous old house.

Before retiring we made a light meal of chicken sandwiches, though neither one of us had any appreciable appetite. I may not speak for Marrist, but as for me - I took me until well into the wee small hours to get to sleep...

In the morning my titled triad was at my door while I was still half-way through washing. His outward appearance was ostensibly bright and breezy, but I sensed that his eagerness to get back to the old house and Turnbull was more than simply a desire to know the outcome of the latter's experiment; he was more interested in the man's welfare than anything else. Like my own, his misgivings with regard to his plan to learn something of the mysterious and alien entity at the house had grown through the night; now he would be more than satisfied simply to discover the medium well and unharmed.

And yet, what could there possibly be at the place to harm him? Again, that question.

The night had brought a heavy frost, the first of the season, and hedgerows and verges were white as from a fall of snow. Half-way through the woods, on the long gravel drive winding in toward the house, there the humor struck! Manoeuvring a slight bend, Lord Marrist cursed, applied his brakes and brought the car skidding to a jarring halt. A shape, white and grey - and hideously red - lay huddled in the middle of the drive.

It was Turnbull, frozen, lying in a crystalized pool of his own blood, limbs contorted in the agony of death, his eyes glazed orbs that stared in blind and eternal horror at a sight Lord Marrist and I could hardly imagine. A thousand circular holes of about one half-inch in diameter penetrated deep into his body, his face, all of his limbs; as if he had been the victim of some maniac with a brace and bit! Identical holes formed a track along the frosted grass verge from the house to this spot, as did Turnbull's flying footprints.

Against all my protests - weakened by nausea, white and trembling with shock as he was - still Lord Marrist raced his car the remainder of the way to the house. There we dismounted and he entered through the door which hung mutely ajar. I would not go in with him but stood dumbly wringing my hands, numb with horror, before the leaning entrance.

A minute or so later he came staggering to the door. In his hand he carried a leaf from Turnbull's sketch pad. Before I could think to avert my eyes he thrust the almost completed sketch toward me, crying, "Look! Look!"

I caught a glimpse of something bulbous and black, hairy and red-eyed - a tentacle, a bat, a dragon - whose jointed legs were tipped with sharp, chitinous darts. A mere glimpse, without any real or lasting impression of detail, and yet -

"No?" I cried, throwing up my hands before my face, turning and rushing wildly back down the long drive. "No, you fool, don't let me see it! I don't want to know! I don't want to know!"

Virgin

GAMES CENTRE

Buy and Save!

Buy the new
STAR TREK STARSHIP TACTICAL COMBAT SIMULATOR
at £14.95 from your local Virgin Games Centre and we'll give you £4.79 worth of discount (valid when signed stamped by the cashier)

Cashier's Signature/Stamp

IMBALANCE OF POWER

(off the usual £7.50 rrp)

THE SPIDER & THE WOLF: GRAPHIC NOVEL BATTLETECH

(off the usual £5.50 rrp)

THE FEDERATION

(off the usual £7.50 rrp)

Or Either
BATTLETECH (A Game Of Armoured Combat)

(usual rrp £12.95)

OR

BATTLETECH BLUEPRINTS
(usual rrp £6.95)

the no. 1 choice for games

ABERDEEN 46 Union Street ■ BIRMINGHAM 98 Corporation Street ■ BRIGHTON 157/161 Western Road ■ Bristol Merchant Street
BROMLEY 104/144 High Street (in Burton Mews) ■ DARLINGTON 14/16 Aston Quay ■ DURHAM 20 Millburn Gate Centre
EDINBURGH 131 Princes Street ■ GLASGOW 28/32 Union Street ■ LEEDS 34/36 Briggate ■ NOTTINGHAM 6-8 Wheelergate
OXFORD Unit 13, Westgate Centre ■ PLYMOUTH 105 Armada Way ■ LONDON 100 Oxford Street

• All offers subject to availability • Inish (usual rrp) prices will differ from those quoted above, however all discounts offered will be accepted in our Dublin branch

SHOP WINDOW

110: Ravenloft 2: The House On Gryphon Hill

(S) (B.P.) (C5) (S)

Well, can you take yet another dose of poorly teetled nibblers? I certainly can, and this scenario is one excellent, if not the most excellent example of the genre. Following, as is so totally correct for the genre, the original Ravenloft scenario (36). Tracy and Laura Hickman have quite superlatively re-created the style and atmosphere of the classic vampire tale, whilst at the same time never allowing the players a plot line transparent in simplicity.

This is not quite a sequel to the first adventure, nor is it a prequel, but rather a parallel story, and the idea of running both 85 and 110 as an interweaved nightmare would indeed make for a classic scenario that I, for one, would love to play in. Let me finish enthusing, and describe the contents for all you budding Bela Lugosi's.

The package consists of the usual cardstock cover, and various maps and information on the inside. Also as part of the cover are the 11 cards which are used (as was a similar device in 85) to randomly determine not only the vampire's identity, but also the location of various items. These need to be recovered as part of the plot, achieved through player/referee interaction under the hypnotic trance of a PC. This makes for rapid referee integration of the information, but since the opening days of the adventure are more involved than the inevitable false calm of all horror film beginnings, this should be no problem to do between sessions.

The module is well-written, with a clear and accurate plot description leading in to atmospheric and well-written chapters on the various major locations. The pack is accompanied by a good collection of player handouts, pre-rolled characters and a map, all of which do match up perfectly with the booklet text. An event chart, on which pre-set events have been logged day by day, and further referee arbitrated events are added, making referee control and understanding of the scenario easy and clear.

I cannot, due to both the plot and the genre, reveal too much of the actual adventure, but it includes the classic country gentry, their beautiful daughter, a village silent and deserted at night, the villagers sullen and strangely blank during the day. The players' sense of reality is excellently broken down, perturbing events are mixed with just enough sanity to never allow any security of expectation. The resolution is very suitably tragic, with a mix of scientific and supernatural so necessary in this type of tale. The potential for turning this scenario with any other RPG is enormous. Indeed, it would be especially suitable for a late 19th. C or early 20th. Century RPG, such as Justice Inc. or CoC. All in all, an excellent product, recommended for nearly everyone. And now, just for all the players reading, and just to do it in reverse order.

"In the cold sunlight of a dying autumn, you step from your inn and stroll along the deserted streets of Mordeantshire. The delirium has passed now; the hideous nightmare passed, and clear in your mind must be the task that has brought you here, to this quiet, rural fishing town. Your job, to aid the Lord and Lady Westermay, parents of the beautiful Virginia, now strangely troubled and sleepless, as is her fiancé, the fair-haired, kind, and strangely upspring Alchemist... Count Von Zarovich!"

TOM ZUNDER.

Creature Creation

STEVE DILLON
A HOUSE ON GRYPHON HILL

This is a system for creating semi-random 'monsters', plants and other organisms for use in any RPG, but specifically to be used as part of Fugitive's "Worldmaker" world creation system. The publishers claim that 'this system can produce virtually anything'. To test this theory, I decided to have a go at creating a "one-off" creature. With no preparatory reading, and little use of creative imagination, I produced the following in a matter of minutes:-

"A creature about the size of a child, with the appearance of an 8-legged spider, with crustaceous shell armour covering its grey, wrinkly, toad-like skin. On the thing's head are two feelers which respond to touch, and are retractable. The thing is a coastal dweller, where it burrows lairs in the beaches to give birth to its young. Curiously, there are 3 genders of the species, and having given birth, it abandons the offspring and moves off to inhabit another's lair. It makes the new territory and patrols it regularly. Always a loner, there are only a few of this species left alive, scouring the beaches looking to pick the meat off dead sea-carrion, assisted by its chameleon-like properties and the subtle use of powerful magic spells..."

Above all else, this book is fun to use, and produces surprisingly consistent results whether for creatures, plants, humanoid races or microscopic organic disease molecules. A very well thought-out product that's obviously been well researched and play-tested. The system lends itself very well to computer moderation, i.e. once programmed in, a keystroke can provide truly random results to any GM's content. However, the designer insists that its use is not meant to be random, but rather a mixture of dice rolls and forethought, requiring the GM to select certain attributes that may make the creature more interesting, or discard those which cause inconsistencies. Personally, I prefer the random method, as this requires even more thought as you try to explain how a rhinoceros sized jelly can fly without wings!

This product is a must for anyone who enjoyed EON game's QUIRKS just for the sake of creating weird and wonderful life-forms, or for any GM wanting to personalize his campaign.

STE DILLON.

NEW GAMES
BY G.D.W.

Traveller 2300

GAME DESIGNER: ROBERT JOYCE (G.D.W.)

Traveller 2300 is a game based in the near future, the 24th century. Following a third world war which shatters both super-powers, much of Europe and China, the world is left to recover. After further fuel crises and sporadic wars, the world starts to explore the solar system. Through all this the most dominant power has been the French. They maintained global peace and aided the world recovery. A practical star drive is developed in the middle of the 22nd century, and the countries of the world start to explore space in the immediate vicinity. The game starts at the beginning of the 24th century. This is just two years after the Third French Empire has been inaugurated. The nations of Earth have explored up to 50 light years from Earth and over thirty colonies have been established. The scene is set for more exploration, the discovery of artefacts and establishing contact with new alien races.

Traveller 2300 is a science fiction game which creates probably the easiest background for adventure writing I have seen. There is a solid background which uses concepts that all can appreciate while not necessarily agreeing with. The Third French Empire sounds unlikely yet plausible. Traveller 2300 provides the means to explore unknown space and to discover new people and artefacts. This may sound a lot like Star Trek, but I feel it is superior because the constraints upon players and referee are far less than for Star Trek. As an introduction to SFRPGs, T2300 is also superior to Traveller because it is set historically and culturally closer to home. In most SF games, it is impossible to find a virgin piece of a world or a star system. In this, even planets within 10 light years of Earth have not been properly explored, and further out are planets that have never been landed upon. All this combines to make T2300 an exciting and different game with potential to be great if well supported by GDW.

Contents: The game consists of 2 rule books, a near star map, a near star list, a forms booklet, a starting adventure and some reasonably good size dice (not the type where a magnifying glass is also supplied so that the numbers can be read). The two rule books are split into the Players' book and the Referee's book.

The Players' book deals with character generation, skills, careers, equipment, weapons and a lot of background setting. Character generation is fairly simple and consists of choosing a career and allocating points to skills allowed. Every 1-10 years the character has to succeed in passing a turning point or he/she leaves that career and character generation is over. The skills allowed are different for each career and the player decides on skill points allocation. They are much the same as Traveller skills and cover a wide range of activities. The histories and world political geography are well set out and plausible in most cases (even if Britain was omitted from the Political Geography section). The equipment and weapons are also well thought out and reflect the beginnings of a hi-tech civilisation. The Referee's book is where the complications set in. It provides the basic rules of play. There is one rule which can deal with anything from starship combat to finding a needle in a haystack. This rule is called Task Resolution and is probably the most generic rule I have ever seen. It provides a frame work from which referees can give reasoned and plausible account of the chances of the success of any action. The task system is based on five levels of difficulty ranging from easy to impossible, easy being a throw of 3+, on a D10, to 19+ for impossible. To this D10 throw are added modifiers which are based on relevant skills and characteristics. Task Resolution is therefore a process which is fixed by the referee at the time of application and so can increase the chances of a fair and realistic result. I feel that the Task Resolution system makes T2300 a much more accessible and easy to play game than it might have been. A good system overall, which was previewed in Twilight 2000.

The Referee's book also contains details of all types of combat from hand to hand to indirect fire, ship landing, non player character, world mapping, animal encounters and the most complicated part of the game - world generation. World generation looks to be a swift copy from Book 6 of Traveller. There are differences, though, and T2300's system is much easier, but still complex.

Both books have some very good artwork but both also contain some ridiculously bad artwork which lowers the overall presentation of the game. The books have soft covers which seem to be very popular with game companies but not the buying public. There seems to be few typesetting errors in the game, but there do seem to be some errors in the rules. I have so far found three: One in combat and two in character generation.

The combat error is a simple one. The character has a life level for use in combat, but no mention is made as to how these are used. I suggest that the Damage Points Value of a weapon is subtracted from the life level of a character when he is hit. If a player reaches Zero life level, then he is seriously wounded and will die soon if not treated.

The next two errors are more complicated but need explaining if the game is to work properly. The first is in the turning point a character has to pass to go onto another tour of duty in his/her chosen career. In the paragraph on this on p022 of the players' book it states that the first turning point (1P) is easy, the second is routine, the third is difficult, the fourth is formidable and the last is impossible. The scores for these throws are as follows 3+, 7+, 11+, 15+ and 19+ with a maximum bonus of +4 to the d10 roll. Therefore, the max. score that can be thrown is 13. (A 0 counts as zero not ten). This makes the last two turning points impossible. However, it also states that no character can pass the 5th pt. This does not tally with the above. I suggest altering the table to read differently. That is that the 1st and 2nd pts are easy, the 3rd is routine, the 4th is difficult, the 5th is formidable, the 6th is impossible. This tables much better with the statement on max. number of pts that can be passed. I'm not sure that this passage is actually in error, just that it is badly worded and set out so that the impression of an error is given. The second error is a far more tangible, as it means that characters can bump themselves on tables and fall unconscious. In the passage on life levels and consciousness levels, it states that a character has Size (a score from between 1-20) divided by 20 consciousness levels. This means that most characters have zero consciousness levels. In combat, a character falls unconscious when the total of shock and stun points he has received equals his/her cons. level. Even a light wound from a small pistol can give the character a stun, so most characters are going to drop after their first scratch. For ammets, Cons. levels are calculated as MASS/20 which gives much more adequate values. I suggest that a typing error has occurred in the section on humans and that cons. levels should be MASS/20 and life levels should be MASS/10 which gives much better values and tally far better with NPCs in combat who now fall unconscious only after taking a total of three stuns plus shocks.

The near star map provides a 3D space for exploration. The near star list is a classification for every star giving its name, magnitude, size, spectra and its X, Y, Z, co-ordinates from Sol.

Overall, the game is well produced and set out. Most of the artwork is good and the wealth of information and cultural references make it suitable for all ages. I am not sure of what age range it is aimed at but it seems to be the younger player has become disenchanted with the more restrictive games and feels that Traveller is too complicated. Apart from the apparent errors I have found, the game seems to be well balanced and is lacking, fortunately, in the 'America is mighty' attitude of many games set in the near future. This will please many people who feel that certain recent games are just symptoms of attempted American dominance of the European World.

JAMES CHAPPLE.

Runequest 3

PUBLISHED BY GAMES WORKSHOP (UK) LIMITED, 15000 AVON HILL, (C7.95)

There can't be many readers who don't know that I am a RuneQuest fan. True, my GM days originated with the 'old' RuneQuest, the great Gloranthean campaign that were exclusively Chaosium. The excellent price of RuneQuest III, when published by Avalon-Hill, compounded by the extraordinary changes in both appearance and content made me turn my back on it. Still clinging to my battered copy of RQII, when this one landed on my desk, my attitude changed. There is something about this version that makes you want to read it, I doubt whether it is the new low price, since mine was provided courtesy of GW, but rather the sleek presentation, the colourful interior illustrations and the compact "all-in-one-book" format that is at first appealing, and absorbing, and I intend to review this as both a comparison with RQII, and as a new game.

This hardback contains the first instalment from GW, who aim to produce a whole series of hardbacks in the ensuing months. Geared more towards newcomers than the old RQ system, the editorial staff have cottoned on to the wider audience which RPGs now attract. The reader is drawn gently through character generation (incorporating more in the line of character background, to add "feeling" right at the start). There's very little changed in this department, with the odd exception such as APPEARANCE replacing CHARM, and the introduction of Fatigue Points.

Each characteristic and play element is illustrated with examples, using the Saga of Cornek the Pict, very useful for beginners, or for getting a quick overview of the system!

The only drawback is that the sample character sheet (with permission granted to photocopy!) is located at the back of the book, and is difficult to tear out for impatient beds like me.

The combat mechanics, for those who don't know, consist of spell-casting, attack and simultaneous parry, performed in sequence according to the Strike Rank (SR) of the character. Damage is effected by weapon type, personal modifiers, armour type and effects the injured character's Hit Points value. Non-combat skills are effected by modifiers as well, certain characteristics have primary, secondary or negative effects on the PC's skill ability. Calculating a modifier for skill types (eg. agility skills, manipulation, knowledge skills, etc.) is much less cumbersome than referring to tables and, once entered on the character sheet, can easily be used to introduce new skills and see how the character copes. As these modifiers come in single unit numbers, it also allows the PC to have a true % skill of say 27%, rather than just a unit of 5.

The game mechanics consist of 1 main system, the percentile (%) dice roll. The character has a predetermined chance of performing any action, which he has to roll equal to or less than to succeed. If he rolls especially low, he has achieved a special success, or even a critical one, with suitable benefits, whether this be whilst leaping a puddle, or when engaged in mortal combat. If, however, he rolls exceptionally high and fumbles, this can be rather disastrous, especially when he's got few Hit Points left!

The main thing about the % system is the ease with which a character's improvement can be recorded, if he makes successful use of a skill during an adventure (and succeeds in a subsequent skill-type roll), then he can earn 1-6 bonus points, making it easier to succeed with that skill next time, but harder to improve.

Magic is divided into 3 categories nowadays (unlike the 2 types of old), or rather, Chaosium have presented 3 attitudes toward magic for the PC to adopt. The first is Spirit Magic, the low-power spells which require but a magical focus, the spoken word and a movement of the hand: the rapid-fire battle type spells. Such spells are readily available (at a cost) to all adventurers, not just magi or clerics, as in the character-class structure of other FRP games. Divine Magic is rather special, in that it is only available to religious Initiates or Priests (Which, incidentally, any PC can achieve through devotion, experience and donatorily: the disadvantage is that religious devotion requires the giving of money, restrictions on learning and adventuring opportunity, but the benefits will far outweigh these. Powerful spells and the support of the deity. The third type of magic, Sorcery, is available to agnostic PCs in the game, based on the belief in an impersonal universe. It is not associated with evil as such, just the physical properties of the universe. This is potentially the most powerful of RQ's magic. It is this section that enraptured me, I feel, as there are but 3 religions which are given the barest of mentions, as opposed to the full scholastic of the Gloranthean pantheon we used to know and love. This will probably be the first area to be expanded by GW, as it is certainly the most needed. The only other shortcomings are the lack of adventures; there's not even a hint of a mini-scenario, and it is also lacking on detailed background to non-human civilizations.

It's interesting to note at this point that the word "religion" is now largely replaced by the word "religion", alongside a statement that "the word (cult) is never used to connote evilness or illegality". Make from that what you will, but it is nevertheless evidence that the pressures of societal norms do permeate the gaming sub-culture.

Enough description of how RuneQuest actually plays, and more for the potential buyer. What you get is nearly 200 pages, well-illustrated and effectively presented with efficient tables and a thorough index. This gives you character generation, the combat element, adventure skills of all types, the effects of a character's living environment (you know, everyday things like poison, disease, asphyxiation, etc.), creatures and non-human races including those peculiar to Gloranthe (such as Hellings), and those whose origins must surely belong in Gloranthe (eg. the lustful, hated Brool).

The difference between this and the Avalon-Hill RQII is obvious, it has been generalised - it no longer pretends to be for "Fantasy Europe" or "Glorantha"; it's just a game system for games players. I like it, and I think it will be a lot more beneficial to those FRPers looking for another game system than GW's own hybrid, Warhammer. It's cheaper and it's a far nicer production. Congratulations to all involved with it.

STE DILLON

INTRODUCTION:

Following the success of our religious theme in issue #7, and as further encouragement to each GM to develop his own campaign setting and culture, we take a look this issue at religion in a medieval setting. More importantly, we consider the effects of heresy in these times.

Firstly, a definition of Heresy:

"Opinion or doctrine contrary to the orthodox doctrine of the Christian Church, or to the accepted doctrine on any subject."

Many role-playing games (those that don't ignore the issue entirely) have a problem with religious classes. Primarily, there is the question of why a cleric should be adventuring in the first place, and secondly: what is his relationship to his church?

Some attempts have been made to rectify this situation by extending clerical abilities (eg. conversion), or defining the God/cleric interface more closely (eg. restricted spells). These efforts, while useful, have not solved the problem of creating a reasonable and playable background for the clerical character. It is my contention that the solution depends upon the religion itself, rather than the individual character. In this article I shall attempt to demonstrate this: first, by looking at some theological guidelines, and then going on to examine the scope for setting up heresies, and player role-playing possibilities.

TYPES OF RELIGION

The first question is: what type of religion do we wish to portray in our campaign? There are basically four varieties, starting with the most primitive.

1) Animism, in which the world of material matter is believed to be the manifestation of various nature spirits. These common varieties are Druidism, Totemism and Ancestor Worship. These are not necessarily mutually exclusive. Totemism is common among nomadic peoples, while Druidism would be expected in a sedentary population. Ancestor worship may be held in common with either of the others but also exists in its own right.

2) Polytheism, or the worship of multiple Gods. Note that the devout will only worship a single deity, though bound to admit the existence of the entire pantheon. Elements of animism may re-appear within such religions, for instance druids in the Greek myths.

3) Dualism. In this system there are two Gods in opposition to one another, usually representative of Good and Evil. The 'Law versus Chaos' struggles so popular in fantasy, may be seen as a pantheistic version of this.

4) Monotheism, or the worship of a single God. Christianity falls within this category because the Devil is regarded as a fallen angel, rather than a God with creative powers of his own.

ELEMENTS OF FAITH

The next decision to make is, what does the religion believe? What explanations do they hold for the creation, etc. All religions have some sort of faith, which can be considered in a number of categories:

a) Creation: how, and/or by whom, was Life, the Universe and Everything created? Was it all the same? Was the Universe created by God but Earth by Satan? were different races created by different Gods?

b) Destiny: does the race exist for some purpose? If so, what? Are they mere pawns in a cosmic game, figures in the landscape of a dreaming God, or do they hold the power of the balance in their hands?

c) God on Earth: Does God ever manifest himself on Earth? If so, for what sort of purposes? Crusades? To tip the balance? To start new, or revive old, religious movements? Is the sovereign always an incarnation of a God?

d) Churches: Why does the church exist? Do the Gods require worship or sacrifices (what kind, how often and where?) in order to survive, or do they have an independent existence? If, say, a God is patron to a city, to what extent does the God mirror the actions and feelings of his domain, and vice versa? Who may enter into priesthood, male only, female only, both? Are there vestal virgins, sacred harlots? What about initiation rites?

e) Fate: Are individuals responsible for their own destiny, or are they fated? Perhaps, partly both?

f) After Death: Do people have souls? In any case what happens after death? Is there Heaven/Hell, Nirvana, Valhalla, Re-incarnation, Limbo, the Halls of Waring, or is that it? Another possibility is that people are only born with the potential for a soul, which must be developed through a series of mental and spiritual exercises.

g) Recruitment: Does the church seek to convert heathens, or is it exclusive to a particular cultural or ethnic background? Again, it might be completely tolerant (eg. Bahá'í).

h) Messiah: Was there a founder of the religion? If so, was he a prophet or divine? Did he have a miraculous birth? What portents foretold his coming? How did he come to his ministry? What are some highlights of his teaching, in terms of events? What about his death: was he translated like Elijah, did he ascend like Jesus, or did he just die? What about resurrection? Did he have followers and how did they spread the word? What about his family?

i) Gospel: Does the religion have holy writings or is it all transmitted by word of mouth? If the latter, how rote learning? If the former, does the religion take some or all of the writings literally? If only some, then which? What scope is made for interpretation on the remaining parts?

j) Behaviour: What is correct behaviour for the layman? For the priest? For the worshippers?

CORRUPTION

To what extent a church becomes decadent will depend on many factors, but it may be assumed to take place after some confusion in control. Power, as we know, has the inflexible ability to corrupt, and when you have the power to make or break kings and nations, it is hardly surprising that evil reaches into high places. It is relatively simple to understand: once it is seen that the clergy do indeed have power, then young people who crave that control may enter into holy offices solely to acquire it, regardless of any sense of religion. Some of them eventually, will rise to the top, and then all sorts of disgraces may set in. It should also be noted that churches are mostly organised hierarchically, and such a structure is ready-made for those desirous of power, particularly if there is a belief in something akin to Papal infallibility.

Of course, what one religion regards as corrupt another may see as holy, so there is a large dependence on what the particular religion believes. Ultimately, most corruption is directed towards the indulgence of worldly passions: whether that be money, wine, sex or power. Rather than give guidelines, the following are some examples of what went on in the middle ages:

- 1) Simony, or selling of sacred objects (like or otherwise)
- 2) Selling indulgences. The church sold forgiveness for sins which would "assure" the purchaser's entry to heaven.
- 3) Despite the ban on women priests there is rumoured to have been a female Pope (of "Pope Joan" by Shew).
- 4) Popes had both mistresses and children, and cardinals resorted to intrigue and assassination in order to be elected Pope (for example, the Borgias)
- 5) Convents had to have a male priest to say mass for them, because of the interdiction on female priests. Sex between the priest and his flock was not uncommon (see Russell's "The Devil" and the story of Abelard and Heloise)
- 6) Crusades, the great christian missions to free the holy land, also happened to be a convenient way for impoverished monarchs to raise a tax on the people, as well as averting potential unrest at home.
- 7) Various quasi-religious organisations like the Knights Templar (Paladins) resorted to at least questionable, if not profane, practices (see "Call of Chulhu" and "The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail").

ALTERNATIVES

Is it surprising, in an environment like this, that there are dissenting voices? No. Once there is corruption there will equally be a backlash. The first variety of dissent is within orthodoxy, and can take a number of forms.

- 1) Monks or nuns who retreated from the world into a monastery or convent, advocating a simple life, living from the land. Frequently, the monks were so industrious that they became rich themselves.
- 2) Friars. A Friar is basically a wandering monk of no fixed abode. The principle is that since he does no toil but prayer, and lives off alms, then he cannot become rich. While there was no female, Christian equivalent of the friar, there is no reason why she shouldn't exist in a tertiary setting. The friar will have a home monastery to which he may return from time to time.

3) Hermits. Those who seek individual isolation to wrestle with their souls, practice meditation and learn wisdom. More arcane arts are practised by the hermits of some religions. For example, Tibetan monks would retreat to a cave in order to practice what is A&D is called "Protection from cold". Other skills included the creation of a tulpa - the materialisation of a thought-form; and long-distance running at extreme speeds. Hermits have been known to take abodes other than caves; for instance, Simon Stylites lived on top of a pillar for twenty years.

4) Ascetics. These are more common in the east. Fakirs are one variety. Basically they mortify the flesh in order to harden the spirit. Lying on beds of nails is well known, but there have been others who would never sit down or lie down, would look at the sun without closing their eyes (and go blind), and so forth.

RIVALS

Before considering the second variety of backlash, it would be as well to ponder the possibilities of schismatic movements. These normally come about in three ways:

- 1) Through separation by geography, politics or war. The best example here, is again christianity. After Rome turned to Christ, there were soon anachars of believers throughout the empire. After the fall of Rome, and through the dark ages, many parts of christendom were cut off from one another and, inevitably, developed in diverging directions. By the middle ages, contact had been re-established with the churches in Russia, Greece, Syria, Egypt and Ethiopia but the differences had become too great and they could not be resolved. They did not, however, wage war on one another, for the simple reason that their spheres of influence did not clash.

2) A heresy may get strong enough to establish itself. This is rare and will occur when the reformers have powerful political friends. A good example is the rise of protestantism in England: would it ever have succeeded had not Henry VII wished to rid himself of the yoke of Rome?

3) In polytheistic and other more tolerant religions it may be relatively easy to establish a new religion, since it rapidly ceases to be so. The reason is that it is readily accommodated as a breakaway sect rather than anything radically different. This applies to new movements who disagree with the founding church over interpretation rather than dogma. An example here would be the whirling dervishes: they are devout muslims who follow the islamic code, but have variant beliefs on some parts of the Koran which are open to interpretation. Such leniency on the part of the orthodox can be highly flexible.

HERESY

The second form of backlash is one form of heresy, of which there are basically three types:

- 1) In reaction to corruption, heresies may spring up of the hair-shirt variety. Typically they are extreme and concentrate on those particulars which we today recognise as being symptomatic of repressed sexuality. Examples are the Neoplatonists, and Flagellantes, and, as recently as the last world war, in Russia, the Skopje.
- 2) Divergences of doctrine. For example the followers of Bishop Anus believed that Christ was not born divine but became so because of his purity.

3) The influences of other religions. Dualism had a profound effect on many christian heresies: for instance, the Bogomites, Albigenses, and Cathars. All of these believed the Devil not merely capable of creation, but that he was in fact the creator of the Earth. As such, men were inherently evil, so, necessarily, was sex, which was to be abhorred and only to be indulged in for the purpose of procreation. Members of these sects were urged to take vows of celibacy once they had produced offspring. It is likely that these beliefs directly influenced the first group.

One final point: heresies are, by definition, a sect belonging to the same religion. The exact point at which a heresy becomes a religion in its own right is moot, and depends upon which side of the fence you sit. Largely the distinction comes down to power: when did christianity cease to be a Judeo-Christian heresy? - Once it was acknowledged by Rome and the empire. When did protestantism cease to be a catholic heresy? - Once it was supported by Henry VIII and other european monarchs.

TOLERANCE

It may be presumed that any movement deemed to be a heresy will be castigated as such. The question that is more important is: will the heretics be persecuted? The same query also applies to members of minority, or foreign religions. In other words: how tolerant is the church?

The table (top right) is a guideline, and GMs should feel free to modify it as they see fit. The total should be added to give percentage for persecution to be instituted. In some cases, for instance where a heresy is growing more popular, repeated rolls may be required over a period of time.

Some of this may need explanation. To illustrate, let me use the example of the Albigenses in the 12th century. Whilst they had been declared heretical long before, it was not until the Albigenses had approached 20 bishoprics throughout southern France, Switzerland and northern Italy that the church in Rome finally acted. They did two things: first, they called for a crusade against the heretics, and second, they created a new institution to deal with them: the Inquisition.

Two things were learnt. The church discovered that the Inquisition was a wonderful way of keeping in control of the masses - hence the increased likelihood of persecution following its creation. Secondly, the secular authorities discovered that a) you can exert problems at home by whipping up hatred of someone else, and b) you can seize the victim's wealth too.

Finally, this table should not be used for two deities within the same pantheon, unless they are sworn enemies. Nor should it be used when there are several religions vying with one another to become the established church. This situation is rare, and only likely to occur in an empire which has grown too big, too

OPTIONAL TOLERANCE TABLE FOR GMS

Creed of established church is specifically tolerant in general (-5)
Creed of established church is specifically tolerant to other religions (-25)
Established church actively seeks converts (+15)
Creed of established church is believed literally (+25)
Established church is dualist (+10)
Established church is monotheistic (+25)
If persecution, crusade etc. has been previously instituted (+20)
If all previous persecutions/crusades have been disastrous (-15)
If culture of church has just conquered nation of the rival (+30)
If heresy based on difference in interpretation (-20)
If heresy based on difference in dogma (+25)
If holy places of established church are occupied by rival (+15)
If power base of established church is threatened (up to +50)
If politically expedient (up to +50)
If religion is directly opposed to established church (+15)
If religion does not seek converts from established church (-5) fast (eg. 4th century Rome).

ROLE-PLAYING

The quasi-medieval world is popular amongst both games manufacturers and players. It provides a model of a much more interesting religious background than one which is wholly pantheistic:

i) there is an established church hierarchy with multiple associated branches including the Inquisition, so-called orders of chivalry, monks, friars, nuns, Jesuits etc.

ii) There are a number of schismatic christian churches who are divided by doctrine, distance and political outlook.

iii) There are other religions (viz: Islam and Judaism) with whom Christianity is in contact and who, while endorsing the same deity, have totally dissimilar beliefs. Periodic wars occur between christianity and Islam.

iv) Even further afield, civilisation is beginning to come into contact with other cultures who do not even recognise the same God! They are, of course, ignorant and must be shown the light. In the near east are other monotheistic religions, as well as dualists; whilst India, China and Japan are polytheistic. These may be expected to have their own sects, heresies and associated groups. Meanwhile, the tribes on the America plains and the Russian steppe are totematic, while other forms of animism exist throughout the third world.

v) Despite its proselytising abroad, the church is increasingly venal at home, and there is a growing market for heretical preachers.

vi) Whilst individuals from other cultures and with other beliefs are tolerated, this is not true for groups of non-indigenous races. Peoples such as the Jews and Romanies (Gypsies) are persecuted throughout Europe from Russia to Britain.

vii) Through the influence of Jewish mysticism (Kabbalah) there is an increase in alchemy, astrology and the like.

viii) There is a simultaneous increase in the study of science, similarly challenging the church's world view.

ix) Minority religious cults (Druidism, Wicca, Satanism) flourish in secret.

This then is the world of medieval times, rife with suspicion and subterfuge. It is an ideal setting for a campaign, in which a clerical character has a particular and relevant role. As opposed to the usual rather lame excuses for a man of God being out adventuring, there are several very plausible ones within this milieu, which will also predispose the cleric to particular types of spells:

1) Missionary - Impressng others, healing, defence.

2) Friar - Ceremony, defence, healing.

3) Mendicant (wandering) priest: probably as a member of an heretical or monist sect - Ceremony, oratory.

4) Padre attached to a military grouping - Healing, defence.

5) Inquisitor - Impressng others, chastisement. They may also have special magic items such as +3 finger-nail extractors.

6) Witch-finder - Detection, exorcism, defence, turning undead.

7) Shaman (totemist) and Witch Doctors (ancestor worship) are more suitable as NPCs. The former might well be shape-shifters, while the latter will have extensive knowledge of the undead, and might be sought out by apprentice necromancers. Other possibilities include clerics sent on a quest to atone for their sins, ordered to infiltrate an heretical sect, working with the Inquisition to hunt down heretics, and so forth.

There is one further consideration re:GMs. Many of these were fraudulent but some were not. Fragments of the true cross and saint's bones may be regarded as permanent 'potions of healing' or as equivalent to a 'bottle of invocation'. In MERP they would correspond to a + spell edder or possibly a deity item. Other relics, such as the Tunn Shroud, the spear that pierced Christ's side, the Holy Grail will have unique properties; the spear, for example, might act as a vorpal blade in the hands of a good user, but as a cursed babbler if one of evil alignment should wield it.

To conclude: there is far more potential in theology than is included in most game systems. A comprehensive and realistic religious background opens up new campaign possibilities, and makes the cleric a more rounded and reasonable character to role-play.

BY PHILIP ST. LEGER

AUGUST INTENTIONS:

Prince August: the firm that puts the 'roll' into role-playing-- were displaying some welcome products. In March, they will be releasing single fantasy moulds (£1.75 each). The range includes large creatures such as orcs, Goblins, Ghouls and Armoured Skeletons, and each mould will come with a special sticker. Collecting eight stickers in a special album entitles you to a free single figure mould, a bonus which all home casters should welcome. Since it is possible to recoup the cost of a mould by casting as little as 4 figures, players of tabletop fantasy games should take a closer look.

For the role player, P.A. is expanding its high quality ready-cast figures range. 6 character classes will be available in 4 different positions: each position being suitable for a different role in an adventure. Choose from fighting, casual and asleep (or dead!) positions, and one position unique to the class. The first of these will be available soon. The range will consist of a magic user, armoured cleric, elf girl, fighter, ranger and half-orc dwarf.

Collectors should look out for the cast-your-own-elf chess set, which allows you to cast all 32 figures from just three moulds.

GOING DOWN TO LIVERPOOL:

A few things caught the Crier's eye on the Games of Liverpool stand, including a stray copy of the Barbare Cartland Romance Game. No one, it had been thought, would have the nerve to import this; perhaps it says something about these Games people!

Head of the fair had to be Wabbit's Revenge, Passesetter's sequel board game to Wabbit Wompago. Wambo Wabbit is out to avenge his kin and stop McGreedy from turning them into fur coats. Play Wambo or McGreedy and colleagues Bernie the dog or Randy Andy the dump cat in a wacky wacky game of outthrust strategy.

The Chill rolegame gets a special Creature Feature, a supplement which allows you to play the monster. Fans of Chris Elliott's and Dick Edwards' 'American Excess' (Fantasy Chronicle #6) may not need this product, otherwise seems an invaluable and fun addition to the Chill range. Packed with puns (at least in the blurb), it should also be good for a groan or two.

QUESTING BEAST:

The Toy Fair also had its turkeys. The Crier's Bernard Matthews roast award goes to Quest for the Dragon. Quest lets players wander round a variable layout dungeon, and build up strength until their character is ready to kill the dragon at the centre of the complex.

The game appears to have been produced on the assumption that big packages sell, and hang the quality. It plays like Warlock of Firetop Mountain without the detective element.

Quest will undoubtedly find its adherents: the Crier's tip for the biggest is dust.

RIPPING TIMES:

Away from the Toy Fair, the live roleplaying explosion continues to, er... well, explode. Foals and Heroes is an amateur society to publish, promote and organise the LARP hobby, and at the same time ensure that no-one gets ripped off again. It is a complementary organisation to the professional groups like Mythlore which already exist.

The group is based in the East Midlands, and events are usually held over weekends. Major events lasting a whole weekend are also staged and usually consist of two or three adventures, training, trading, costume making and a banquet.

Newcomers to live roleplaying who go to a Foals and Heroes event have their first adventure free; good news for anyone contemplating taking up LARP. Member ship comes from all over the country, so even if the East Midlands are a little inaccessible to you, it may be possible to find a current member who can help you out.

For more details, write to - Foals & Heroes, 152 St. Aidan's Close, Norfolk Park, Sheffield S2 2NQ. And tell them the Crier sent you!

TOY TOWN REBELLION:

Late January saw a boom in the amount of product news. The Earle Court Toy & Hobby Fair gathers large numbers of toy and game manufacturers under one roof, all of which have new products on show. The trade and journalists get a chance to see what is coming up for next Christmas, and a rough insight into the big toys and games for the forthcoming year. This issue's Crier reports on the goodies on show for Fantasy and SF gamers.

PIXIE POWER:

The Pixie Pixie is an unusual name for an unusual company. An extension of their specialist costume hire company, Roger Price and Helen Holdiorth etc offering live action role playing via 3 scenario situations: The Duxedom of Chouse (Fantasy), The Planet of Phacke (SF), and the Detective Society (murder mysteries). They also arrange dinner parties, either mystery based or a medieval banquet, as well as 'teller' type games and traditional RPGs, taking the concept of a LARP society one step further than many. And it all looks very efficient as well. For details:-

Party Packages, 160, Hearsall Lane, Coventry CV5 6HH.

VISIONS OF FANTASY:

Adventurer cover artist Paul Ellison (#4 and next issue #5) will be displaying some originals alongside 9 other fantasy artists in an exhibition from 17th June to Friday 26th June this year. More details are available from:-

The Association of Illustrators Gallery, 1, Colville Place, London W1P 1HN.

WORSHIPFUL COMPANY:

TSR (UK) have a new board game, Legend of Heroes, due out in late spring. Designed by Greeme Morris, it aims to capture the elements of role playing and put them into a fun family board game.

Three more Dragonlance books are expected: The Dragonlance Companion, Dragonlance Tales: The Magic of Krynn, and Art of the Dragonlance Saga. Art is, the Crier presumes, some legendary hero of Krynn.

One gem from TSR's catalogue to look forward to is Swordquest: The Book, which should already be out in the U.S. It will be far more fun and literate than GW's Thrud special.

WORKSHOP WONDERS:

The Nottingham giant seemed somewhat subdued this year. Previous displays have been based around space shuttles and castles-- this year was limited to a few graceful yellow pavilions atop the stand. But the range of new goods was as incredible as ever:

There was the new Realms of Chess for Wertheimer tabletop rulebook play, and then Death on the Reik, the third adventure in the Wertheimer role play campaign. Wertheimer 40,000; Rogue Trader seems even nearer production. This takes the Wertheimer fantasy battles system and plants it firmly in a futuristic setting. Again, a mammoth hardback packed with illustrations-- but possibly no good rules.

BY IAN MARSH

Adventurer Snoop Extraordinaire

FANZINES FOREVER...?

by Ben Goodale & Alex Berdy

LATEST RELEASES!

After last issue's Foray into the world of established fanzines, this time we'll take it easy with recent issues of fanzines which have contained fiction. A lot of snide comments have been levelled at the quality of fanzine fiction in the past, but recently there has been a marked improvement, and many zines are now notable because of their fiction. However, let's do the latest releases first

ONGOING EDITIONS!

On to fiction now. We had better point out that, with one exception, these are not fiction zines and contain other material, and thus you shouldn't expect too much from them

PANDEMONIUM is the latest incarnation of DEATH ISSUE and #9 contains quite a lengthy piece of fiction by the editor. A sound plot and written with a certain immediate style makes it a very nice read, destined to keep its readers going for all those SF-starved fans. All round the zine is impressive, the only real complaint being the standard of presentation. Definitely worth getting (and its not at SF!)

THE IMPALER is a somewhat different fanzine, which has now ceased to cover gaming. #7 contains an excellent piece of fiction based on Stephen King's CHRISTINE. It's very well written and the author has certainly got permission from both Stephen King and NEL Banta. What's more, it's to continue in #8! But word on the street is that THE IMPALER has now folded: so there won't be an issue #8.

NAURON STRIKES BACK is the rather dubious title of what can only be called a rather dubious zine. The editor seems simply to scrawl as many games as possible. Issue #1 contained scenarios for G&C and Warrior for AD&D, as well as a piece of 'Lovecraftian fiction', amounting to all of one page. It's interesting you.

ANGELA is a penzine produced by somebody who has been in fandom quite a while (and even been respected at times). It's short and snide, and mainly concerns itself with running a few postal games with a few reviews of Superhero RPGs thrown in. If you are thinking about getting an SPRING, then ANGELA will probably be a lot of help. If not there is little else to read, but what there is, you may find interesting.

INTO THE DARKNESS is a good first issue, though the editor's decision to produce a zine similar in many ways to SACRIFICING THE GOAT has meant that he has something to build on. Various contents, a chatty style, lots of campaign material (both devious and based upon the editor's own campaign), figure and game reviews, and fiction, all combine to create a nice first issue. It looks quite smart and could do well, but lacks originality. One to look out for in the future.

Coming in at a whopping 86 pages is TALES AFTER DARK #2, probably the best zine to get if you are looking for fiction of the horrific kind. In fact the purpose of the thing seems to be to scare its readers out of everything except mind, and it does so with verve.

There are no less than six stories, accompanied by four poems, and a piece of non-fiction which asks, 'Why the hell?' A definite must if you enjoy horror.

HARVEST TIME #3 has finally appeared, and it has again shifted more towards wargaming. However, one notable part is the beginning of a fiction series called 'Pilgrimage', which is thoroughly enjoyable, with a nice plot and well-written characters. All round it makes good reading, and its length (four pages) helps. The subject is three mavericks who are really secret agents, in a fantasy world, and something odd is going to happen in Mini Ap Igur.

THUNDERWIND 4 continues a series recounting the experiences of Shadow Stone - 'Starhunter' which appears to be about a character who is a bounty hunter in the future, somewhat reminiscent of Blade Runner. It reads very well and is longer than average (5 pages), meaning that you feel like you've actually read something compared to most fanzine stories which tend to be just one or two pages. THUNDERWIND as a zine appears to have improved a lot as well, though the attitudes of the editors is still somewhat a bit doubtful. Good story.

SACRIFICING THE GOAT, is now on #4 and is very smart. This issue contains only two stories, less than usual, but they're both good. One takes place in a 1984 type setting and is called 'The Perfect Society', whilst the other is all about somebody who goes just a bit too far with a video game (?). Nice fiction, if a little short.

DAUGHTER OF DOOL is another name change for the previously titled 'Once in a Lifetime' and 'Vernon Ooyesey'. This zine takes its fiction very seriously, none of which present anything particularly radical. The zine has come a long way from issue 1 (this is #3) but still fails to provide a satisfying read, due to its short length and lack of content. Something of interest being organised by the editor is a collection of stories written by members of fandom, be they editor or readers, to be published in a special fanzine. If you feel like you would like to contribute a story, or would like to know more, why not get in touch? Proceeds of the collection will go to Oxfam.

EYE CATCHERS!

Enough fiction, here are the zines which caught our eye recently

Also worth having a look at is IMAGINE 16, which on top of all the gaming articles and the Cthulhu scenarios, has an interview with Bryan Ansell, Managing Director of a certain games firm. The interview is very interesting and provides a lot of information about how Games Workshop operate, and their plans for the future.

Something to look out for in the near future is SLAVE OF FANDOM, a new fanzine. The purpose of which is to review all the other current RPG fanzines. This will provide comprehensive details of all the fanzines around today, and so if you are looking for coverage of a certain topic, or for a few zines to subscribe to, then the zine should be very useful. The fact that we are both in the production team has nothing whatsoever to do with it being great though, not at all...

WHAT'S STIRRING? is the name of a new fanzine produced by a new game company, The Laboratory. Issue 0 is FREE (for an SAE), and sports a glossy two-colour cover, and a very nicely produced. Inside there is an introduction to the team, background on their PBM, and an outline of their future plans. The writing style is somewhat weird, to say the least, but when it's free, you can't go wrong. By the time you read this issue 1 will be out, and this will contain a 16 page AD&D competition module, as well as a variety of features, including a prize competition. WHAT'S STIRRING is looking like it will fill the gap between prozone and fanzine, and The Laboratory are looking for a 5000 circulation.

FURTHER INFO...

Oh, and I dare we mention that UTTER DRIVE! 6, now out, contains an interview with top rock group SAXON? Not to mention it being a Time Travel Special...

The ADVENTURER ZINE PACK aims to introduce people to some of the better fanzines around at the moment, so that they get a taste of what fanzines can offer. This pack is not designed to be a cheap way of getting fanzines, but as a service we offer to people who would like to get a couple of fanzines, but haven't a clue which ones to get. In the pack you get five of the best fanzines around, and an introduction to them and fandom. If you are interested, send cheque/PO for £2.80 made payable to BEN GOODALE, at the relevant address.

ADVERTISEMENTS

'NEMESIS' - the fanzine that's more amazing than Dangerous, more useful than SNIP! (I'm sorry, but we're having nothing else advertising the prevention of AIDS!) Anyway, get 'Nemesis' for 50p from Tim Hyde, 92 Broad Lane, Eastington, Wolverhampton, Staffs WV11 2R3.

HARVEST TIME. The roleplaying/wargaming fanzine. Only 50p from Martin Veart, 10 Cedar Drive, Oulton Broad, Lowestoft, Suffolk, NR33 9HA. HT welcomes contributions, especially discursive RPG articles. Go on, get writing!

THE IMMORAL MINORITY! #2. Contains AD&D, Cthulhu, chat, letters, cartoons, reviews and silliness. 50p + stamp from Peter Wilkinson, 527 Gladstone Road, Sheffield, S2 2BS.

P.T.M.O.T.O.I. Playtesters wanted for new PBM. David Deboer, 236 Arnhart Road, London E8 2BS.

RELEVANT ADDRESSES

Alex Bardy, 28b Gladstone Rd, Archway, London, N19 3JX (Editor of CEREURETRON #2 out now @ 50p + SAE - SP/PG/SF & Editor of ENT, #6 out now @40p PBM/Chat).
Ben Goodale, Cammore, Cranlanish, Perthshire, FK20 8QS (Editor of UTTER DRIVE!, #6 now out @ 70p FRP/Chat).
INTO THE DARKNESS: Nick Price, 45 Sutherland Crescent, Blythe Bridge, Stoke-on-Trent, ST11 5JT (50p, 40 ASpp).
ANGELA: Brian Ogilvie, 84c Burnett House, Hillhead Hills, Con St., Aberdeen AB9 2WU (30p, 16 ASpp).
SACRIFICING THE GOAT: Mark Jones, 16 Orchard Green, Alderley Edge, Cheshire, SK9 7DT (50p, 40 ASpp).
WHAT'S STIRRING? The Laboratory, Box 55, 19 Colbourne St., Swindon, Wiltshire, SN1 2EG (#0 Free for SAE, A5 20p/11 50p, A5 32p).
FLOATING WORLD: Russ Huxley, Priory Hall, Priory St., Coventry, CV1 5FD (50p, 40 ASpp).
DAUGHTERS OF OOD: Bob Jackson, 25 Withers Rd, Lydiate, Merseyside, L1T 0BX (50p, 32 ASpp).
THUNDERWIND: John Dalziel, 27 Forvie Terrace, Aberdeen, AB2 8TH (75p, 76 ASpp).
PANDEMONIUM: Garen Ewing, 93 Sackville Gdns, East Grinstead, West Sussex, RH19 2AR (90p, 36 ASpp).
THE IMPALER: Mark Stockton, 10 Vine Court Rd, Sevenoaks, Kent, TN13 3JU (50p, 32 ASpp).
TALES AFTER DARK: Garrie Hall, 83 Beaumont Rd, Loughborough, Leicestershire, LE11 2JA (12, 58 ASpp).
IMAZINE: Paul Mason, Top Flat, 19 Rushmore Rd, Putney, London, SW15 3JX (75p, A4 24pp).
SLAVE TO FANDOM: Mark Nelson, Telford Hall, Moor Rd, Leeds, LS8 4DB (50p, 20 ASpp (we think)).
HARVEST TIME: Martin Veart, 10 Cedar Drive, Oulton Broad, Lowestoft, Suffolk, NR33 9HA (50p, A5 35pp).

SWAP OR SALE: Deluxe Runequest III & Monster Compendium for £20 OR Stormbringer RPG + Companion. Phone DCM Bosham (0243) 575641

WANTED to buy or swap: The Fantasy Trip RPG, Adventures in Fantasy RPG, Man, Myth & Magic RPG. Five got Rune-Quest 3, Bushido, Aethmash, Board games, Ardun Trilogy, others. Phone William (0963) 32760

Secondhand Games! bought, sold and part exchanged. Many rarities. For our latest Newsletter and full details send a large SAE to: ERYX GAMES, 4 Cisbury Drive, Findon Valley, WORTHING, BN4 0DT.

THE BEST painted figures ever seen, boxed Viking regiments £10, Samples £1. Send to Mark Workshop, 23 Ulswater Road, Ferryhill, Co. Durham, DL7 8HH

ROLLER - SKATING DRAGONS (100mm) Skating Minotaurs (80mm) Only £14.95 each. Fully painted and boxed

Notes
All ads to be prepaid to Mercury Leisure Publishing, 85 Victoria Street, Liverpool, L1 6DG. Each word costs 15p. Display ads cost £4.50 per S.G.G. Mercury Leisure Publishing cannot accept any responsibility for any transactions arising from classified advertisements, and reserve the right to alter, refuse or attend any advertisements as they see fit.

Cheques to: Chaos Inc., TIR 72 Cincart Road, Glasgow G42 9DU

Club Notice Board:
DRAGON CON '87: The SE USA Fantasy Gaming Convention has changed venue to: The Paramount Plaza Hotel and Conference Center, Atlanta, Georgia, USA. SAE to: Dragon Con '87 Box 146, Cranston, Georgia, 30021, USA

Dorchester Professional role players Meet Wednesdays + Mondays 7-10 (pm) Place: players' houses. Games played: you name it, we've got it. You get it, we play. Notes: Must be able to travel - accents welcome.

Gemebusters RPG club: seeking new members to replace those lost to University etc. Must be 16+, either sex, beginners welcome. Many SF and FRPGs played every Wednesday 7.30pm - 11pm at the King William IV Public House, Coventry Road, Nuneaton. Contact: Nigel Grouse (0203) 450130. NB: Venues required to 1987 tour. Write to Nigel at 141 The Moorfield, Coventry CV3 1DU

ERITH WARGAMES GROUP: meet 1st and 3rd Tuesday of every month (7 to 10) at St Paul's church hall, Mill Road, Northumberland Heath. Age 14+ preferred. For SF, Fantasy and S/H-mm rpgs, wargames, board games. Contact Andy on Darford 335008 (evenings)

LEADA. The London, England. Autoduel Association plays Car Wars. We're in the London/Essex area. Free membership, free magazine club T-shirt. Not in the area? Form your own club. Call Phil (04023) 42355, for help or membership

Warfare! New club forming. Want Players/GMs 16+. Phone Kate or Tom - 275273

NW London (14+) Ring Karen (Arnhem) 5855

LIVE BY THE SWORD

READERS' LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Please address all letters to: LIVE BY THE SWORD,
ADVENTURER, 85 Victoria Street, Liverpool L1 6DG.

Women in Roleplaying seems to be causing the biggest stir in Adventurer readers then anything else at the moment, which makes me wonder about the personality of the fantasy games market, particularly when I receive comments like the following:

CHRIS HUNT, Southall: While I agree with Janet Vaila's suggestion that involving female characters will produce a better game with more depth, I was disappointed with her examples. She suggests that fantasy need not be a man's world, but then proceeds to suggest roles for women within a completely male-dominated framework (until this issue- ed.). Moreover, why is it that the roles she suggests for women are nearly all power-hungry psychopaths like Livia? The roles she suggests are the same stereotyped roles which men traditionally seek. The problem with Janet's article is that she concentrates on traditional fantasy societies. What about inventing a society where power seekers are truly despised and honour is used to keep governments in check? I don't want to knock Janet's article, because the real problem is that the task of creating alternative roles for women is impossible because the games on the market at the moment are about worlds where women traditionally have no part to play except as bedding material. When it boils down to it, the worlds on offer are not about people, but about power. Characters are only interesting in terms of how powerful they are. Who cares whether they are women, men or monkeys? Only when a game comes along which offers different objectives will it be possible to treat women (and men) in a different way. In the mean time, we are left with making the best of a bad job. It's good to see material like Janet's.

DOUGLAS THOMSON, Tarriff: This very controversial area of FRP is one which requires a great deal of discussion. Personally, I would like to see a lot more females take part in role-playing, but many don't seem to be interested. I am about to start a game of WHFRP with two female players in the group, and I'm sure I'll let them read this article to see what an active female role-player thinks of the situation.

SIMON NICHOLSON, Slough: Janet's references to orcs are interesting; it should be remembered that Tolkien's orcs were originally elves, corrupted mentally and physically by Melkor. Perhaps they also have extreme life-spans: they would not be able to leave Middle-Earth for the west, however; hence their hatred of elves—they are envious. Expanding on Janet's argument, it would be impossible to distinguish male orcs from females unless you are an or yourself!

There is a message here. Tolkien's world was calculated, rationalised; the ecosystem was plausible. RPGs like D&D simply grabbed the basic components of the world, without the structure of Middle-Earth (to avoid copyright problems and also to provide what was thought to be a generic system). Thus we have AD&D orcs who are inherently evil for no apparent reason. And we ALSO have goblins, despite the fact that Tolkien's goblins were orcs under a different name (they are only called goblins in The Hobbit).

DAVE MORRIS, London: The FRP scene thing involves rather more than how women are treated in game settings. It is the portrayal of women as objects to drool over that is objectionable, and where this occurs (figures and game + book covers), it undoubtedly turns a lot of women off the idea. (Remember the shoddy "chainmail bikini" version of the RQ2 cover that was used in the UK?) If a game world is one where women are getting a raw deal, or where one race is lordling it over another, that's really just one more challenge for the players to have to cope with.

DAVE HALLETT, University College, Oxford: I have a small postscript to add concerning the questions raised on the reproduction of Harpies, Medusae, et al. This very question occurred to me some years ago, and for one particular case it seems to me the answer is self-evident. Why also should Harpies have a Charm ability but to make use of human males? You can always eat them later. Presumably only female young are Harpies. Males are probably eaten. All pretty uninteresting, I admit, but really very logical, don't you think?

What? Logic in role-playing games? You'll be asking us to provide rationalisation for fantastic things such as shape-changing next!

SIMON NICHOLSON: Neil Grant's comments (LBS#7) on cosmogonism show a distinct lack of physical knowledge. Does he really understand E=MC<sup>2</sup>? Energy and matter are different forms of the same thing, on a ratio of c<sup>2</sup>:1. If Decuria lost sufficient mass to become 3, but, he would lose 6 X 10<sup>18</sup> joules of energy—about the equivalent of a 1500

Megaton explosion! Enough to obliterate the United Kingdom... I think that line of pseudo-scientific rationalization should be left alone, eh? But tell your players it's magic—then get 'em to make SAN rolls.

JAMES COCKBURN, Surbiton, Surrey: Let us suppose an average human weight of 11 stone, or 70kg.

Average an average fat weight of 2 Kgs.

This means 68 Kgs. must be released as heat. Using E=MC<sup>2</sup> with M=68Kgs, and c=299992548 ms<sup>-1</sup>.

This gives: E=68 X (299992548)<sup>2</sup>
E=6.11 X 10<sup>18</sup> Joules
E=1.7 X 10<sup>12</sup> KWH

In 1974, the world energy used was 2.24 X 10<sup>12</sup> Joules.

This means one transformation to bat form would supply 1/50th of today's world energy requirement, give or take a few KW.

Put another way, the temperature in the bat and its immediate surroundings would rise from c. 20°C.

To 730,000,000,000,020°C.

This would be far more efficient at removing vampires than crucifixes and holy water. It would also have side-effects on fantasy cities, quite similar to a thermonuclear device!

The sudden temperature drop going the other way would lower the temperature to absolute zero and have equally devastating effects.

When dealing with fantasy, it is far more sensible to use explanations such as magic making a 12 stone bat fly, than to use science and arrive at a completely ludicrous result such as the thermonuclear vampire!

Yes, I think I prefer my explanation for lycanthropy as well! And now, onto Mr. controversial:-

KEVIN HASSALL, Sevenoaks, Kent: Let me make myself clear here! I am not a scientist. Anzac Naith! My point is, (see LBTS# 5, 6 and 7) if I may clarify it, that there is no absolute morality, and evil is a purely subjective concept.

The Vietnam War caused massive slaughter and insanity, as did the first World War, as did the Nazi concentration and extermination camps. But apparently logical justifications have been made for all of them. I do not accept these justifications—I believe the Aryan myth is just that—a myth. And I can't accept that halting the spread of communism or German power justified such bloodshed, but I can SEE others' points of view, even though I reject them.

I could give considerable evidence that Americans are "evil" (Hiroshima, Vietnam, etc.) but I don't really think that they are! The CnC rulebook gives no evidence at all to support the comment that Shadde Moll is "evil", so why should I believe it? Only descriptions of Nyctanthropy's nature is half-way convincing in terms of proving his evilness. Most references to the gods/nasties revolve around the word 'diabolic'.

"of or pertaining to, The Devil"

Essentially, this means that these gods are the antithesis of Christianity. Being anti-Christian may be sufficient damning evidence for Christian fundamentalists like Mr. Bradbury, but not for me. I have met several adepts who are vehemently anti-Christianity, but they aren't 'evil' at all! What, if anything, is proven by the unsubstantiated statements in the rulebook?

SIMON NICHOLSON: Religion for Call of Cthulhu PCs: For a start, I can see many people being offended when their religion is translated into "game terms", especially when Robert Blinksborn attempts to give rules for "religious abilities"... He also fails to realize that the basic premise of Lovecraft's Mythos is that God, Allah, and so on just do not exist! Man is totally alone: there is no heaven or hell, no afterlife, no saviour. Nothing but oblivion. Man is contrastingly insignificant, as are his concepts of good and evil. That's what makes the whole game so frightening... It might be interesting to see how a religious character comes to terms with the knowledge that he or she is without god, in a completely materialistic universe where humanity means nothing.

Mr Blinksborn ALSO makes the mistake, like many, of thinking that Buddha is a god. On the contrary, he was very much a man. Buddhism does not hold with god as a benevolent Saviour. One is All. All is One. It's actually very meaningful, but unfortunately has nothing to do with rolegames, so I'll stop.

KEVIN HASSALL: I doubt that I am alone when I say that I was very annoyed and a little insulted by Robert Blinksborn's attitude to religion. We do not live in Glorantha or Greyhawk: God (Allah, Christ, Brahma, Buddha, etc.) does not distribute Rune magic or magic items. Religions which offer and offer it abstractly, not as a 'mad shaman' or Hollywood style exotic ability. They have philosophies, and codes of conduct and morality which are all-important. Robert ignores them.

The "Holy water" bit merely reduces the church to the level of a D&D alchemist's guild, producing poisons to fight 'monsters' with litmus, which promises that "Allah has power to grant victory" (Koran 22:40) offer, according to Robert "little or no help". Of the Buddhist and Hindu philosophies, only some sort of dark Occultic power and a SAN roll bonus seems. Of course, the SAN roll bonus is useful in game terms, but it's a gimmick, and a meaningless one at that. So you want a Buddhist monk PC? OK, but what Robert didn't mention is that he won't be able to accept any money, and must be a celibate, sea-total, vegetarian pacifist!

If I may enter the foray at this point, Kevin—you must remember that Robert's article was an attempt to abstract religious benefits to game terms. Just as in FRP games, the benefits of years of magical study are represented by a quick 'mind meld' spell and a roll of the dice, so in CoC, religious study, discipline and faith may be rewarded with gifts. What of the Pentecostal gifts of 'speaking in tongues', or of healing, or of the countless 'miracles' that devout men have been reported as performing? True, religious characters should strictly adhere to a religious life-style, but isn't that true of the Runequest Priest or the D&D cleric? Providing that limitations and restrictions on their lifestyle (and adventuring opportunity) are adopted, I see no reason why 'magical' benefits cannot be incorporated to provide a more balanced game.

E. J. LEACH, Camber To Dale Jenkins (LBTS #6):

"Vi estas la plej inteligenta vira en la mondo, se vi povas paroli Esperanto! Vi estas granda 'Adventurer', esperanto!"

But seriously, I wonder how many readers speak Esperanto. Any ideas, anyone?

I don't get many requests from people wanting scenarios written in Esperanto, but I do get the occasional mislaid about wargames:-

JOSEPH VALE, Lancaster: As a spate of wargaming RPGs seems to be coming, why has no-one devised a WW2 RPG, or may this prove to be timeless? If so, no more timeless than 'Revised Bzeco'. And does anyone cover Twilight 2000 apart from Challenge? If Adventurer were to cover an adventure, I'm sure the majority who play it would be most grateful.

JOHN TREADAWAY, London: It's a common misconception held by many inexperienced wargamers and role-players that there is little in common between the two styles of play. Good wargames are role playing under another name anyway—a General (FC) attempts to keep in line as army (large group of NPCs) in a combat situation. I must admit that in the 12 years I've been wargaming (and 9 or 10 that I've been RPGing), the number of times this crossover has been apparent has... well, let's just say that it's not as often as it should be. It does exist, and is occasionally being exploited (witness Battle System and Warhammer). Just touching on a point here: there is table top fantasy wargaming beyond Warhammer, you know! I think Adventurer is in a strong position here to encourage some articles in the middle ground. Obvious examples would be games based around Battletech, or perhaps single ship-to-ship Star Trek games. I was thinking specifically of the system in the original STFRG that allowed half a dozen people to role-play the bridge crew of a star ship in combat. Any gamer who narrows his or her mind to leave only one sort of gaming is doing themselves a large disservice.

R.G. LOWE, Aberdeen: Re: the two new TSR books, I find the modification to the falling damage rule (PHB p. 105) so vexing... I have presented a table below to show the relationship between distance fallen and the velocity of the falling object. Using the basic equations  $v=u+at$  and  $s=ut+\frac{1}{2}at^2$ , assuming  $a=9.81$  m/second<sup>2</sup>:

distance fallen (')	velocity (ft/sec)	— damage —
10	25.4	1d6
20	35.9	2d6
30	43.9	3d6
40	50.7	4d6
50	56.7	5d6
60	62.1	6d6

In determining damage from a fall, it is the velocity of the object striking the ground that causes damage, not the distance fallen. Therefore, by the new system, a fall of 40' causes 10 times as much damage as a fall from 10'. However, as can be seen from the table, after a 40' fall, the velocity attained is only twice that for a 10' fall. The old system gives the figure as 4 times the damage for such a fall—still excessive. Also, damage in the new system "bottoms out" at 60'. At this point, the object must have assumed to have reached terminal velocity, as damage does not increase with greater distance. This is a total nonsense, as terminal velocity is not reached in the real world until a distance of 240-260' is fallen. The old system flattens out at 200'—wrong again, but minimally in error compared to the gross error perpetrated in the new system. Here is my version:

Distance fallen (')	Damage	Distance fallen (')	Damage
10	1d6	110	3d6+1
20	1d6+1	120	3d6+2
30	1d6+2	130	3d6+2
40	2d6	140	3d6+3
50	2d6+1	150	3d6+3
60	2d6+2	160	4d6
70	2d6+2	170	4d6
80	2d6+3	180	4d6+1
90	3d6	190	4d6+1
100	3d6+1	200-220	4d6+2
		230	4d6+3
		240+	5d6

These figures are given as for an unarmored character or creature. If armor is worn, the damage inflicted will be increased by the amount given below:

Armor Type worn	Additional dm.
Leather/Padded	1-2
Studded Leather/Ring Mail	1-3
Scale Mail	1-4
Chain Mail/Elfin Chain	2-4
Spill Mail/Banded Mail	2-5
Plate Mail (all types)	2-5

These figures do not take into account the "four" factor for higher falls. To allow for this, it may be a consideration to increase the damage by 1 hit point for each 10' fallen above the first, ie. +1 for a 20' fall, +2 for a 30' fall, etc.

As a footnote, if the damage scale seems unusual in that an 80' fall causes 5-15 points of damage and a 90' fall causes 3-18 points of damage, for example (ie. less damage can be taken from a higher fall), doubtless should be reminded that the average damage from these falls is 10 and 10.5 respectively. That is, on average, the higher the fall, the more the damage.

Also, let me relate the case of a tall gamer in an Avro Lancaster bomber who bailed out without a parachute, high over German territory during WWII, and survived the fall in the AD&D world, such everyday men possess only 1-5 hit points. Using the D&G system, a fall of only 30' will lead to death very quickly unless a handy panacea is there to render aid immediately. The PHB system will achieve the same result for falls of 60' or more. Neither system would let the tall gamer live. As it happens, both his legs were broken, but he was conscious and lived to tell his tale. Unfortunately, the Germans didn't believe his story, and accused him of spying. The system I have presented would have given him a chance of survival (5-30 points for his fall of over 240'). A very slim chance, as it should be.

IAN PEARSON, Cleveland: I am disappointed at the fall in popularity of Superhero RPGs, or at least in the coverage they get in magazines. I hold you, Adventurer, to remedy this. Even when scenarios have appeared, they have needed to be completely battle-orientated, bland, and not tending to campaign play very well. What we need is a decent campaign background, defining networks through which villains commit their crimes, and one or two plot ideas. If you can't lower yourself to publish such an article, then how about a page or so on the origins of comics, and reviews, so that we can convert these to game terms.

DAVE KITE, Salisbury: Have you got anything against MSN? You've mentioned (in about 1 line), the Advanced Rules system (#1), Realm of Magic (#3), and Gates of What If (#5), each one with a sarcastic comment. Please change your attitude, and review some of its wide selection of accessories.

OLIVER DICKINSON, York: Aw c'mon! Dry those tears! It is true that so far no scenario pack for RQII Glorantha has been published, but it is perfectly possible to play RQII in Glorantha, and only in Glorantha, so it means you have to quietly forget some aspects of favoured characters' previous history, renege their spells and abilities a bit, and otherwise adapt; but there need be no basic incompatibility. No one has to include one's or hobbies.

I take Greg Stafford's comments that RQII reflects his original conception of Glorantha better, very seriously, and I welcome the changes that make it that much more difficult to become a Runekeeper in splendid armour and all that, even though I have griped at the effects of new rules in some respects (Runequest Runequests in WD #75). One can, as a Glorantha-groper, feel that the link has been weakened in the wish to produce a generally appealing system, but I do know of players who do not wish to play RQ in Glorantha; there's no accounting for tastes. Anyway, it's done now, and I feel that old times should be able to adapt. If the new rules make it harder to create overmighty PCs and NPCs, that is all to the good, though it does make it harder to cope with some of the monsters in The Big Rubble, for instance. The new version of Griffin Mountain, at Griffin Island, does provide a good example of how to adapt powerful characters from one system to the other.

But enough of this. Are your readers interested in hearing more of Glorantha and the gang, in fiction or 'realty' (ie. what has happened to them since the Great Chart Caper)?

Thanks for trying to convert me, Oli., but I still think that abandoning RQII was a sell-out! As for Glorantha and the gang, most of our readers probably don't know what you're talking about: or do they? Stay tuned...

PETER & JANET VIALLS, Hants: Best Market was excellent. Robin Perry can write scenarios as well as cartoons! We are impressed!

DR. C. SARGENT, Williams: The Percy of our clan Marc G. was a real treat (T.C. #6). More of this sort of thing, please. Have you got the legendary one of Paul C****a with the rubber duck?

JON FREEMAN, Weymouth: How do your readers feel about fiction in Adventurer? I don't mind it, so long as it is good, and doesn't take the place of gaming material. Haggopias was an excellent story, but six pages! Even the most prosaic, wretched tritest of the abys can become tiresome. How about a reader survey to find out what we really think and want? Please urge your readers, sitting on their backs complacently in reader-dom, to get off their backs and do something! Shape the future of their hobby, if only by scribbling a few lines like this.

It's funny you should ask about a reader survey; next issue, we have the most detailed, inclusive survey this side of the fantasy games universe. We want to know what you want to see, and we mean to find out. The poll will be in the middle, so I expect every single one returned, or I'll send someone from the Church of the White Zone to convert you! Awelting replies... Ste Dillon.

TASK FORCE GAMES

1110 N. Fillmore / Amarillo, TX 79107

FEDERATION AND EMPIRE

Battle for the Galaxy! Can The Federation-led alliance halt the Klingon-led war machine before the Galaxy is lost?

Federation and Empire brings you the Galactic War that created the battles you've played with Star Fleet Battles. Without Star Fleet Battles, it recreates "The General War" at a strategic level. Yet Federation and Empire is also the ultimate Star Fleet Battles campaign system.
$49.00/£32.95

STAR FLEET BATTLES Vol. II

captures the excitement of starship combat in space. Each player commands one or more starships, and allocates the energy available, fires the weapons and plots movement. Hits are scored on "System Displays", which show the layout of the starships' systems. Movement and combat are simultaneous, based on pre-plotted instructions by the players.

$19.95/£13.95

STAR FLEET BATTLES VOL. I

Star Fleet Battles Volume I is a complete starter set for gaming in the Star Fleet Universe. The set includes: 108-page Volume I commander's Rulebook, 32-page Ship System Display and chart booklet, 216 die-cut counters, dice and a large map.
$22.00/£16.95

STAR FLEET BATTLES Vol. III

is the starting set for gaming in the Star Fleet Universe, including seventeen different scenarios, including solitaire, two player, and multiple player situations. Several scenarios are included for beginning players. Also included are two campaign games for extended game play.
$22.00/£16.95

FOR DETAILS OF ALL TASK FORCE PRODUCTS AND ADDRESS OF YOUR NEAREST STOCKIST IN EUROPE, SEND TO:

GAMES OF LIVERPOOL LTD., 89 VICTORIA STREET, LIVERPOOL L1 6DG.

FASA Corporation
1035 West Van Street
CHICAGO, IL 60607

Battletech - main scenarios include 48 page rule book containing Basic, Advanced, Expert and Operator rules, six full-colour counters, two full-colour terrain maps and four sheets of full-colour terrain markers. $29.95/£14.95

The First's Teeth - 15 scenarios involving the legendary regiment known as the First's Teeth plus background. $7.95/£4.95

The Black Widow - History and details of an elite fighting company including 15 scenarios. $7.95/£4.95

Mech Warrior - Detailed rules for role playing Mech warriors. $12.95/£6.95

Citytech - Rules for playing Expert Citytech. $25.95/£14.95

Armtech - Covers aspects of elite combat involving transport and use of Mech Warriors. $15.95/£9.95

Battletech Mech Set - A mecha to expand the games of Battletech or Citytech. $45.00/£27.95

Technical Manual - Instructions of Battletech plus descriptions and statistics. $9.95/£7.95

Available at: Thunder 108 - A Battletech novel. $3.95/£2.95

COMPETITION RESULTS!

Well, I'm sure glad we held our Brian Lumley Cartoon competition in issue 6. Some of your entries were, well, somewhat unlikely ever to see print except in the pages of the Aber Rag mag or something. However, we did get some good attempts, and the best of these are shown on these two pages.

YOU KNOW GONE MAD WITH Andrew Harding, Wells

Andrew Harding, Wells

Kara Bedrossian, Welwyn.

Mark Schofield, Stratford.

Martin J. Wyatt, Barrow-in-Furness.

Perry Telman, Downton.

Ann Broomfield.

Andrew Dodd, Barnsley.

Kieren Diment, Amerham.

Marcus Thornton.

1st. Prize goes to Andrew Harding, from Wells in Somerset, who sent 3 entries-cops! We didn't place any limit on the number of entries, did we? Still, we all decided that his was the funniest, so a specially signed Deluxe copy of Brian Lumley's "Hero Of Dreams" is on its way to you, Andrew. To everyone else who entered, thanks very much and keep trying. The standard was pretty high, as you can see from this selection.

Chelton

by D.Michaels

GM's Notes

This is a scenario for Middle-Earth characters of Level 1-10. It was also intended to be used for Basic D&D, but we have left out all relevant bonuses and weapons modifiers. A D&D GM with a good knowledge of Tolkien's books, and an intelligent approach to his/her games should find this a useful and playable scenario. Some reading through and preparation is required, though, to make it easily playable.

The season and climate for this adventure have been deliberately left out, to give the GM more flexibility in inserting this scenario into his/her campaign. It should be noted that the climate is quite cool, thus facilitating the herbs and poisons that are available.

Background information for NPCs is provided at the end of this scenario, though no statistics are provided. The GM can use stats, from suitable existing NPCs, or generate them specifically.

Introduction

You have just arrived at the Inn and, having been greeted by the landlady and shown to your rooms (if you are staying), you are having a drink. Exactly why the players are there is left to the GM's discretion.

The Inn of the North Sense

The Inn is so-called because it was once something akin to a 'tugues gallery', and any adventures who happened along needed a safe sense to survive. I've never known so many perceptions to be made.

It has changed somewhat of late, in that its usual customers are now of 'Galenardion' (Rohan) blood. It's because of their presence that the landlady changed the sign outside - a white horse on a green field.

A jolly atmosphere can easily be achieved while these warriors drink, as they are fond lovers of song (though some are fighting songs which vaguely resemble our rugby songs), and will encourage singing when visitors grace their doorstep (Orcs, Wargs, etc. are naturally not invited).

The Hallings of Stowewich (pronounced Stow-ich) also contribute a few of their folk to this haven who, besides being fond of the food they serve here, will share their songs with the Rohirrim. Visits from Dwerves are not uncommon, though they don't share the same enthusiasm as Rohirrim when it comes to song and games.

The Inn is located 5 miles south of the Emnethash at the point where it meets the south-eastern perimeter of Fangorn Forest. The Landlady, the widow Gáleiren, runs a clean establishment, though she does like to flirt with the menfolk - and lives alone, save her only son Gmell (aged 5). Gáleiren - a noted cook herself - is now forced to employ two cook/deans. This keeps her busy to tend the bar, entertain guests, etc..

The Inner Level of the Inn

A) The Reception Area - A humble entrance for such a plush place, it is empty except for a coat stand, and is illuminated by lanterns. The main door faces south, opposite which is a large staircase, leading up to the guest rooms, and steeplehead's living quarters.

B) The Dining Room - A small but nicely decorated room, with furniture (including 4 tables, 12 chairs) consisting of woven basketry. Its tidiness does justice to its cleanliness, with everything in its right place, both on and off the table. One would instinctively expect good food judging from the overall impression of the room alone. There are menus on each table, listing one or two rare dishes, which might suggest the cook is not human. In spite of this attractive room, most diners choose to eat their meals in the Bar Area. There is a cupboard-type dumb-waiter along the eastern wall of here, with a Light +10 lock. Opening it will reveal a full set (12 pieces) of silver cutlery (worth about 10-100gp). There is also a place of parchment, on which is written in Sindarin, 1 keg older; 2 kegs (meat); 1 keg wine, etc. etc. This is an old inventory of Gáleiren's.

A large open fire burns in the marble fireplace at the far end of the room. A door north of here for staff only leads to the Kitchen.

C) The Kitchen - A rather large room for a kitchen, with an equally large well stocked pantry. The pantry is full of food with a Easy +20 lock on it. The kitchen has a huge burner at one end, a bronze-hooded roasting pit, a basin (complete with taps), utensil racks, large table, and a cabinet containing a set of earthenware dishes.

D) The Bar Area - A huge marble fireplace adorns this room, and more often than not, someone is seated by it. The bar itself is a bullet style, from behind which a site is scooped from the huge, traditional open oak. This is indeed the largest of the rooms in the building, with eight tables, eight long benches and a half dozen high backed chairs. At present, there is a chest behind the bar, with an Extremely Hard -30 lock on it. This contains payment for the ale seller (250gp), who is due today, and will be given to him on arrival.

E) The News Room - A favoured room for all rumour mongers, and meetings. This room also acts as a games room. Four men occupy it at the moment. There are bookshelves on two of the walls, containing books of middle-earth history, folklore, legend and languages. It a PC sits up all night reading, the GM might reward him a couple of experience points. There is nothing of value in the room.

F) The Stables - An arid outside is used by the smithy, should any members of the party wish their horses shoeing. As he is never around when you want him, it is suggested that you place your request with Gáleiren. There is a tin box in the stable with no lock on - holds Tarp & 8gp - and Gáleiren will advise the party that it is for 'top' for the smithy. Gáleiren actually does the 'smithing' herself.

A large whip hangs on the back of the door. At present there are four light horses, one Meers, and seven large horses.

G) The Washroom - This is adjoined to the stables, and contains one large vat (full of water), one toilet, one wash basin, and a wooden tub. The vat has two outlets, one for the tub and one for the toilet. Opening the toilet outlet valve will allow sufficient pressure to flush it. There are no charges for the use of these facilities, so don't expect someone to draw you hot water (and no-one has left their soap behind for you to steal).

The Outer Level

1) Gáleiren's Room - The door has a Very Hard -20 lock on it, and is always kept locked when the room is vacant. Inside, there is one large bed (which Gáleiren shares with her son Gmell), a dresser, wash basin, a chair and the personal effects of both Gáleiren and her son. Close investigation will reveal an ink bottle, quills, parchment and a bottle of invisible ink (for keeping personal records) on Gáleiren's dresser. There is a book on Gáleiren's chair, this is a Gáleiren's Bible (only joking, it's actually an accounts book). Her dresser also has a chest on it which has an Extremely Hard -30 lock on it. The chest measures 18" x 12" x 8", and contains a variety of jewels including: a jewel encrusted necklace (5-50gp), a gold bracelet (2-10gp), and some coins (40gp, 500gp).

There is also a Dagger with a +2 spell adder in the bottom drawer, and a cloak hanging up behind the door which holds a Daily 1 non-entirely spell. This is an 8th level spell. It not only renders the wearer invisible, but also non-detectable. Its range is 'self' and its duration is for 2 months. It is up to the GM to decide on the difficulty of detecting the cloak's qualities.

There is a 60% chance of Gmell being in this room at any given time. The rest of his time is spent wandering around the premises. He is not allowed outside unaccompanied.

2-3 & 5-11) Guest Rooms - These rooms contain a Bed, one chair, pillow, sheet, and blanket. Anything else found in these rooms is probably still alive, namely drunks.

4) Gorin & Remon's Room - This room has a Medium +10 lock on its door and contains one large bed (for Gorin & Remon), a dresser, wash basin, a chair and personal effects. Among these PEs are: an axe, a mace (both of which are kept next to the dresser), a chest with a Very Hard -20 Lock (under the bed, at the head) containing a brooch (1-10gp), another chest (naturally smaller - and with 50gp 25gp in it). The latter chest has a Hard +10 lock on it. Talk about paranoid!

"What a people you dwarves are for hiding things."

12) Guest Room - This room is reserved for Rohirrim on delivery days. He likes looking out over the stables, so he can keep an eye on his mule and wagon.

13) Stairs - These are located in the south hall section, and descend into the reception area.

14) The East Hall - At the northern end of this hall, there is a panel on the inside wall (west). This leads to the attic. There is no key secret, Gáleiren should show guests this panel when they check in, in case of emergency.

15) The West Hall - At the northernmost end of this hall, there is a panel on the inside wall (east). This leads to the attic, like the one in the East Hall.

16) The South Hall - This is occupied by the staircase leading down to the reception area.

The Attic - This is actually no more than a storage room for old furniture, Gläeren's husband's belongings, personal memorabilia, etc. The attic looks out north, and there are two panels in the northernmost end of the east and west walls. These lead through to the east and west hallways of the upper level (first floor) accommodation. Crebain often stop here, whilst in and out of Fargom Forest.

The courtyard is directly below the attic, and a carefully placed ladder connects the two. Crebain are habitual hoarders of trinkets and other bright objects. The GM may wish to give the players some small finds. However, Crebain are also noted for their eyesight, and from the nearby forest, there is a 10% chance of one spotting someone who enters or exits the attic via the ladder. Each time this action occurs, the chance is increased by 5%.

Service With A Smile

Gläeren's services include normal food and lodging at abnormal prices. The food & drink menu is unusually priced at half normal costs, while lodging is at one and a half normal cost, and is only in the form of Good lodging.

I'd say there's definitely method in this lady's madness - cheap drinks encourage people to stay long enough to be forced into staying overnight. She still profits on her ale (a little), and money soon passes hands (a nice change).

Apart from these luxuries, Gläeren has 4 Light Horses in her stables which sell at normal rates.

At some point this evening, Romil 'the ale seller' should arrive, with a delivery of the Inn's normal provisions. The time of arrival of the 'ale wagon' is entirely up to the GM, though keep in mind he may have other stops to make and there is the possibility of orcs, wargs and things wandering these lands at night. This should also help to set the time of day for the adventure, which again the GM should decide upon once he/she has read the scenario through.

Any PC wanting to buy accessories will be told to see Romil, 'cause there aren't any on the premises. A perceptive PC may notice a red hanging from Romil's neck, which may be recognised as a whistle of some sort. (GM: This is used to summon his bird/familiar when out of telepathic reach) Neither Romil nor Gläeren stock weapons, armour, potions or poisons (though Gläeren does stock Murguets, and Pipe-weed for anyone wishing to become Hobbit-ised (half ounce 2p). Anyone curious as to why no one elaborates on pipe-weed, should rest assured that, though hobbits claim it to be a stimulant (equal to that of ale - but cheaper), and that it is milder (though somewhat slier) than human pipe tobacco, it has a profound taste that is not to a non-hobbit's liking.

Note: Murguets (pronounced murgies) are a chequerberry delicacy, which resemble that of 'beef jerky' (in appearance only), and are primarily made from compressed fish heads.

Romil might be persuaded to stay the course of the night, Gläeren offering him a room (free, of course, though the other guests shouldn't know) and the stable for his rule and wagon. You never know, the wagon might come in handy, or the party may elect to steal something from it, taking into account that one of the NPCs might get suspicious of a stranger wandering around outside, even if he is 'answering a call of nature'.

Should characters wander into the news room, they will see four men sat around a table, possibly having already heard them mumbling from outside. A successful attempt to listen would reveal that they are just about to set up a game of cards and were debating the stakes involved. Otherwise, the PCs might naturally assume they have disturbed a conference of some sort.

A pot-boy 'Guido' is also employed, to tend tables (actually a forty-three year old male hobbit, whose real name is unknown- Guido is a nickname given to him by Gläeren because of his fascination for fire - 'Guido Fewkes' from a human tale Gläeren has heard of).

Guido will suggest that his village has any herbs or potions that the party might need, and are normally quite willing to part with them (at a price), though he doesn't think they would take too kindly to any strangers dropping in at this time of night. He will also advise them of the types of herbs, etc. that might be available in this locale, if asked. The GM should take note of these herbs, so that he may estimate the difficulty in finding them, should the party wish to search the area. Refer to cost should the party purchase any from the village.

Guido 'ain't no use a tinnin' is a fun loving character, though somewhat mischievous. He does tempt fate at times, not just with his fire starting, but with his 'light fingers' when playing cards or other such games of chance.

He would likely 'take the shirt off your back' with his cheating, and his shirt (which he never takes off his back) only adds fuel to the flame - The shirt Guido adorns, which he stole from a troll (air during an escape, aided by the valiant Rohirrim (who have come to love Guido as much as anyone could love the deceitful little scoundrel), has strange magnetic qualities, to a point where it will attract any metal (to a weight not exceeding 2lb) within a six inch radius, and hold it, for as long as the wearer concentrates. This proves very useful to Guido when leaning over tables, after making sure there are no tankards of ale, swords, knives etc. within range.

Guido's shirt has magical properties. The buttons are charged with a 'Lvl 4 Wall of Fire' (elemental) spell, which enables the center to create an opaque wall of fire of up to 10'x10' (providing one and rests on a solid surface). Anyone passing through takes a 'A' heat critical (no RPP). Just as well the little fire bug doesn't know of its true properties.

The shirt is known in dwarf and elven legend, though no-one knows of its whereabouts. It is believed to have been made for Velin-by Aulë (Mahad) - in mockery of her status among the Valar 'The Weaver of Fate'. The [red] was that though the shirt has indeed a powerful spell charged into its buttons, its magnetic properties (though useful), will attract any metal aimed at it, knives, swords, arrows, etc., thus giving life a helping hand (+3 to opponents' DB in melee/combat attacks when using metal weapons). In retaliation to this gesture, Varik is supposed to have wished this shirt onto Auldi's creations (The dwarves. Again in jest, since she knew dwarves not to be the wizardly type). If so, this would explain the shirt getting into the hands of the trolls - but not why they didn't see the dwarf shirt-and-all.

After serving the party, Guido should hint that it is normal procedure for outsiders to tip the bottle-boy (perhaps standing there with one hand open), and will attempt to use his magnetic shirt on anyone who leaves money on the table, especially if he doesn't receive a tip for his services.

Whether Guido receives a tip or not, he is likely to tempt the players with a private game of cards. He prefers a fair game to the one currently underway in the news room. If agreed, the PCs will be the 'game', and Guido will resort to his 'light of hand' talents. The NPCs in the news-room are more than wise to Guido's gambits, and if the PCs prefer to join in, it would turn out to be a fair game.

When caught using his shirt by regular customers of the Inn, they normally treat it as a much closer jest and mock his feeble attempts at innuendo. In retaliation, Guido makes idle threats with the power of the shirt, insisting that it was handed down from the gods (which no one truly believes, including himself, locus pocus nonsense), and that it has the power to incinerate people at the will of the wearer!

NB: All Static & Moving maneuver rolls for Guido and the party should be modified in combat, depending on the amount of ale they have imbibed.

Should the party's reaction be hostile towards Guido, one or more of the Inn's regulars may intervene.

Gmelil - Gálen's son - was conceived only days before the death of Gálen's husband who, it would appear, had merely given up the will to live, as if he were alive.

Guido might pass a 2nd-hand rumour that the true father of Gmelil is Rhilón (A Rohirrim ranger and close friend of Gálen's). He will of course whisper this, since Rhilón is present at the Inn, and his attentions might be drawn to the subject should it be brought up, especially if he elaborates on the subject, (which Guido is fond of doing, if only to tease anyone listening).

Sat with Rhilón are three warriors Athlor, Egner and Redeser (all Rohirrim). The observant PC might notice 4 shields by the door, three of which bear a white horse on a green field, which is the recognised symbol of the Rohirrim warrior.

The fourth shield belongs to Rhilón and bears no crest, as it was a gift from Gálen. Rhilón is not a warrior and doesn't use a shield, but carries it in the presence of Gálen's, as a token of his respect for her offering.

At some point in the evening, Gálen should fit with one of the party, though not go overboard, as this is merely her way of keeping the customers happy. If a PC reacts with 'tenderness', Gálen will show signs of nervousness (which the perceptive PC may notice). Even so, she will do nothing to offend the PC - but Rhilón might...

A player showing particular interest in what's going on around him may notice nose string in the News Room. This will simply be the result of one of the card players cursing another, for winning a record 100pp in a single hand of cards. Players investigating this may be invited to join the game (or warned off for disturbing it).

By this time, the card players are 'well oiled', and one of them will ask Gálen with a view to book a room. He will then be escorted to his room where he will remain, at least until the party have gone. Having lost all his money, he may be tempted to 'find some more', he is somewhat desperate, and might seek out some funds before the party leave (searching rooms etc).

At a suitable moment, two Haffings should be brought on the scene. Moel Gálen and Jonty Grimeace, and be greeted by Guido.

Moel and Jonty have come to inform Guido of their sightings of a party of Woses coming out of Fangorn Forest about a hundred yards north of here, heading in the general direction of Stornich. These haffings will approach the party with the notion that the Woses are out to attack their village. On hearing this news, Romil will rush outside to investigate.

Any PC outside at this point might have spotted the Woses, and/or any PC with his ears open might have heard them. He/she might also acknowledge Romil's hasty notion, in the general direction of the stables, where he might be assumed to be getting ready to flee. Anyone cautious enough to follow Romil to the stables, witness that he is presently conversing with a large crow. This bird is actually a Grébin, who Romil uses as his familiar. Romil is sending the bird to scout for him, keeping him informed of the Woses' progress.

Persuading the Rohirrim to join this expedition should not be too hard, as they like nothing better than a good hunt (Woses are one of their favourite games). The Rohirrim might be somewhat concerned as to why the Woses are at the area, and might assume that they are tracking crows, thus giving the Rohirrim warriors an added bonus at the kill. They will point this out to the party, should they elect to go along with the haffings.

Note: There will be no offer of payment unless necessary to spur the party's conscience.

Gálen might intervene by persuading the party to help the haffings (directing her influence on the PC who is most likely to have some say in what the others might do). This is chiefly because she is fond of her bottle-boy and wishes no harm to come to his village, since they do provide her with some fine handwritings and vegetables. She doesn't like the willful violence the Rohirrim are accustomed to, but she has accepted that it is their way of life.

Any attempt to encourage the few card players to join the party would probably be difficult, since they are quite drunk and not too eager for exercise. They will also suggest that the Rohirrim Warriors should be able to cope with a few Woses. It is also probable that one (or more than one) of them would greet the opportunity to search the party's rooms while they are out adventuring.

Moments before the party are set to adventure outside, Romil will again rush outside. The party may assume he is eager to contribute his services to the annihilation of the Woses. In fact, he is eager to receive news from his Grébin friend. The large bird will inform him of several spiders (of the large variety), in the vicinity of Stornich. The spiders have just edited the forest, by this bridge over the Entwash and are headed straight for the village. On hearing this, Romil will have a change of heart, and decide not to join the others in their quest. Nor will he advise them of the fortune that awaits them, should they continue towards the village...

The Great Outdoors

The surrounding countryside will be affected by the season and climate the GAI selects. It should be taken into account, though, that being so close to the forest (a naturally formed mixed forest), there are quite a few shrubs about, and it is possible that the PCs may find a selection of herbs, etc. Whilst in pursuit, however, and taking into account the time of day, the PCs and NPCs (if any) will probably not be too concerned with plant life.

Once the party have ventured out as far as the sighting position of the Woses, a PC using his tracking skills will notice that there are no dog footprints. In fact, the only prints other than those of the Woses, are of large sized bare feet (and a bit of brilliant detection might reveal that they are from hairy feet - Kudukian).

In view of this, the Rohirrim will not wish to waste their time any further. They will attack and capture the intruders, and take them hostage so that they may hold a tournament tomorrow (this gives the Woses a sporting chance of survival, and a chance to escape in the night).

The party, however, might feel that since they are out and about, they will call on Stornich for some herbs. This is not advised. As Guido sincerely expressed, they are likely to get their heads bitten off. If they are insistent, note the following:

About six miles north of the Inn, the little village is under attack! Just north of the Entwash is a trail of footprints, and lots of them. (The perceptive PC will notice these prints are about 9" across, and are from palmate feet (webbed). The prints lead directly to the village. Any player who makes a successful guess as to the type of animal that created them should receive plenty of experience points.)

As they near Stornich, the party can just make out what made the prints, climbing over the huts of the village are Giant Spiders-plural! There must be at least ten of them, between 4'-8" wide. They are rushing around, with unexpected silence, enveloping the houses in the village with cob-webs. What a sight, and undisturbed by the inhabitants of this small haven.

Still, that's what they see if they stubbornly proceed on their own that evening. To be fair, the GAI should try to persuade them to return to the Inn with the others and go to the village tomorrow. Who knows, they might even get back in time for the tournament at the Rohirrim's camp.

The Rohirrim, having caught their hostages, will ask Gálen for her use of the stables in which to keep the Woses till the morning. She will reluctantly agree, but will be sweetened if Rhilón asks.

Romil will ask the Rohirrim for the job of guarding the Woses. This will be justified on two counts: a) they won't want their 'game' to be ruined by the escape of their captives, and b) if the Woses did escape, they would probably take the Rohirrim's horses (or worse, kill them). Such would be certain suicide for one of these men rides a Mearsh, who are virtually worshipped by the Rohirrim.

though these men generally treat all their horses with the utmost respect, and care.

At this point, assuming the Party have returned to the Inn with the NPCs, and have confined their captives to the stables, they should finish off the evening with more ale and a song.

Meanwhile, Romil will watch over the prisoners in the stables until such time as he is sure people are retiring to their rooms, at which point he will himself retire, observing the prisoners from his room overlooking the Stables. Just before he retires to his room, he will move the ladder from the courtyard and position it under his window, allowing easy access to the stables. He will awaken the party should anyone be snooping around, or if the woses attempt an escape.

Stoorwinch

The Hobbits (Kudduk) of this small village (if App. 90) moved here at the end of the third age, searching for a new start in life.

The village's name is somewhat of a mystery, as it more than hints that the occupants might be Stoores. They are in fact a group of Felchoids, who have only recently found their way out of the forest lands of Rhovanion, whilst their kin-folk moved west back in the 13th and 14th centuries of the 3rd Age. Because of this time lapse, they have still retained their original tongue 'Kuduk', and know western as only a secondary tongue.

Since moving here, they have only once been approached by Rohirrim, whose land they have moved onto, to which a young (and very bold) hobbit related his history in that, "hobbits lived on these lands during their travels to the western lands, whilst men, Hummph! Rohirrim didn't move here 'til Crion told them to in the 26th century (3rd age)."

Besides this one indifference (putting the books straight), and taking into account that most hobbits don't associate with anyone but their own (no offence to the Rohirrim, who have done them no harm), it is reassuring to know there are a few 'Big People' you could count on when there are orcs or wargs about.

A few of the villagers do venture out as far as the Inn, though this started out of necessity to sell crops and baskets, etc. to the Lendaily there.

Like most Felchoids, they have left the Rhovanion name KUD-diken (hole-dweller) behind, adopting wooden dwelling houses as their new abodes (whether said hobbits weren't trendy?). This is one of the factors that contributed to a fire nearly burning the village down, mainly because the houses are so closely knit. These houses, though of wood, are as near as they could get to their original 'holes', so far as shape is concerned. They somewhat resemble the igloo shapes they were accustomed to, but have a pentagonal shape, each firmly having its own house. They have also managed to stay reasonably close to the woodlands, but having found the forest somewhat too mysterious (what with Ents and things) for their liking, have elected to settle near the bank of the Eriwath. This provides plenty of fishing (it may be their riverbank dwellings that led to the name of the village).

The Evening's Events

Having seen the party of adventurers arrive back at the Inn, and knowing them not to have gone to Stoorwinch, Romil will be somewhat disturbed. He knows (thanks to his Griben-familiar) of the movements of the great spiders, and will assume that they will be on their way to the Inn after they have finished searching and attending the village.

Shortly after all are bedded down, a high-pitched, shrill whistle may be heard coming from Romil's room; it is time for him to move. This may awaken the sleeping adventurers, at the GM's discretion. (It is barely audible due to the pitch). He leaves his room via the ladder at the window, providing no one has returned it to its rightful place. If so, he will have to cross the hall in order to gain access to the attic via the wall panel at the end of the hall.

Once he reaches the stables, Romil will mount one of the horses in an attempt to make a speedy escape.

Moments later, a vast shadow will fill the sky. The creature that owns it is none other than a Fell Beast (see in the Nazgul's mount in LOTR). These beasts move silently, and will go unnoticed by any onlookers unless an Extremely Hard (30 perception roll is made). Anyone following Romil will witness the landing of the beast, which has been attracted by the sound of Romil's whistle, and should raise the alarm. The beast will not make any direct attack, it's just curious as to what made the noise. How it responds to the mad scene is for the GM to decide (best as an NPC).

If this scene goes unnoticed, and all are asleep (which may prove difficult, should the horses or woses show alarm at the arrival of the creature), the Inn will soon be visited by a number of equally unusual critters. The great spiders which Romil had been forewarned of, have finished their investigation of the village and are heading in the direction of the Inn.

The Spiders

These are freaks of nature in that, although to all intents and purposes they are spiders, they have huge (9") palmed feet, which leave a trail of prints which may be recognised as those of an extremely large duck. In spite of this affliction, they still move with extraordinary silence and considerable speed. The one thing that may draw attention to these spiders is the clicking noises they make whilst communicating with each other. It is reckoned that a person can hear in on this noise and actually define it as a language, eventually learning what they're saying. The light which emanates from their bioluminescent eyes, does nothing to increase their chances of cloaking themselves, and once discovered, they are very easy to keep track of.

They are likely to attack in leaps and bounds, covering an approximate 15" in one movement, and are just as efficient when spinning their webs, which is the first line of attack, as it is remote and doesn't subject them to as much danger.

Though the ability to remain silent is quite within the capability of these arachnids, they don't find it too easy to find footholds when climbing, and are prone to slip on steep slopes (Inn Roofs etc.). Their vast size (4'-6") does nothing to aid their climbing skills.

If undisturbed, these creatures will completely cover the inn with webbing, which at the rate they move should take about 1 hour. This cocoon effect was earlier employed in Stoornich, whilst they were searching for their victim, Romil. It was only after seeing the Gribbin hovering overhead, that they realised just where he was hiding - at the Inn.

romil at the Inn

Gälerin - Actually an Elven Mage. Daughter of Pseudomaster, she was born in Northern Milkwood, where her people (Sindar) found heaven, after the fall of Belenard (Dorath).

She met her husband Eiron (half-Rohir and half-Dunadot) in Milkwood where he had offered to aid Threndulf (King of Milkwood, once Greenwood) elves, to repel Sauron's forces that were at work against the men of Dale during the War of the Ring. Gälerin wed Eiron, and chose to move to Rohir with her husband at the beginning of the 4th age, where she was compelled to take on a new style of life. She had decided that she should not reveal her race to others, and that she would like to be accepted into his environment, not as a freak because of her gifts of magic, but as a Rohirin. This has been largely successful so far, with her blond hair and blue eyes assisting her deception. Her woodenlin attire help her to fit in, but she is somewhat tall for a Rohir (5'11"), and has to keep her ears covered by her long hair at all times.

She never shows displays of power (spells etc.) unless absolutely necessary. Rhilion is the only person to have seen displays from her when she shot a fire bolt at a group of ocs to scare them off. She does use spells that may not be noticed, like putting people to sleep if they are threatening trouble in the Inn. On such occasions Rhilion might laugh, but won't give her game away.

The rumour of her son being lechered by Rhilion is untrue (what elf would do such a thing), though she does have high regard for him. Her flitting moods are merely to present herself in a more human light.

She married her husband for life, as all elves do, though it was shorter than she had anticipated. Being of Sindar blood, she is very fond of dwarves, and so spoils Romil somewhat.

Her religious beliefs are that of all Sindar and she holds the Mars, 'Goldberry' the water-spirit in high esteem.

Guido - Stoornich's boldest of henchings, was almost banished from their village because of a fire starting fetish, which had often set the forest alight, albeit on a small scale, and had inadvertently led to the near-total destruction of his village. He has since overcome this vice (well almost). He occasionally has visits from his close friends 'Jorly Grimece' and 'Mael Giron' (who, to this day, still think of the whole incident as 'typical hobbit fortune'), and have also come to like his new name - finding it quite amusing.

The phrase, 'eh? no use a runnin'', was a phrase Guido often laughs at, since only he knows where it comes from. It was all he could keep saying as he started to run away from his village, when he set fire to it - 'eh? no use a runnin', eh? no use a runnin'. This was of course before he realised - 'water might help (and more people)', so he wots them up - at last.

He suspects there is something unusual about Gälerin, but is not too bold as to inquire. It is her presence that draws him to work at the Inn, it certainly isn't the money. Guido must be the richest of his folk, seeing most of the money he 'earns', Perhaps 'gains' would be a better word.

Pseudomaster - A much noted mage (lvl 35), who had very little concern for politics, and was more concerned with preservation than war, thus showed no authority in the realm of Thranduil. He was fond of Eiron, and having seen him fall during the great war, held him in spirit, presenting him as normal to all but himself. It was this bond that aided Pseudomaster's rebirth, for though in spirit kind, Eiron was still able to mate with Gälerin, the offspring of which union was Gmelli (Pseudomaster II). Eiron's passing away was preceded by Pseudomaster's departure from Middle-earth, when, having given up his will to live, was unable to hold Eiron in spirit.

Gmelli - Though the reborn Pseudomaster, he is unaware of such. He is aware that he excels in intelligence, and thus is somewhat bold, often the envy of the regulars of the Inn, by comparison to their children. He is fearlessly fluent in three languages.

Gorin & Ramon (Gälerin's Helpers)

A couple of dwarves, that have been here since time immemorial. They came with the property, so to speak, having served with the previous owners for some forty five years, and the ones before another thirty years. Typical of dwarves, they are over-observant of everyone, and keep themselves to themselves, (with the exception of Gälerin, or unless one of their own happens along), treating Romil with some disregard (this is simply because Romil gets on well with people and is far from grumpy). They have come to accept Gälerin's fondness of them, though suspect she is hiding something.

Gorin & Ramon are actually men and wife, though don't ask which is which. They are often offended by the card players who recite verse, which roughly translates 'no kids, no lead, never see two dwarves in bed' (lead, as in perill). This does the trick since they were once the proud parents of triplets, (an achievement for any dwarf) until they were took by Trolls - not a pretty thought.

Rhilion - Eiron's ex-henching buddy and Gälerin's protector, which she doesn't need but wholeheartedly appreciates, especially in times when he may intervene in situations where she might otherwise be tempted to resolve the situation herself (hence 'blowing her cover').

He is a 7th level Animalist, who like most Rohirins, is a noted horseman. Although he is not a warrior, he receives a +20 morale BS whilst fighting from horseback. He wields a +10 broad sword, and a mounted lance. His shield (which he doesn't use in battle) has a 7th level 'Nature's Awareness' spell in it, which allows the center to monitor errant activity in the area. The area of effect is 300' Radius and is held for as long as the wearer concentrates. He wears leather armour, helmet, bag & arm greaves. It is this man's Meeras that is in the stables.

Romil - An ex-agent of Shelob the Great, he is actually a Half-dwarf (Uml) Bard (level 5). He is a fugitive from Gith Ungol, after (miraculously) stealing Sholeb's "Carnibeg" (hand Of Might). He has since migrated west, under the guise of a travelling salesman (with occasional arm-wrestling competitions to earn a little extra), in the hope that his constant wanderings might delay Sholeb in catching up with him.

Unlike most of the Uml, he is quite social in his behaviour, though stubborn when he has made his mind up. He lives in constant fear of Sholeb catching up with him, though won't stop to talk to anyone about his problem, for fear of rejection. He is a bit stand-offish with Gorin & Remon, suspecting they don't care much for him, though he greets them on his arrival, as he does everyone.

Romil is a force to be reckoned with, when armed with his +5 polearm. Carnibeg is a finely crafted steel gauntlet. Although he is not fully familiar with its potential, he uses it in arm-wrestling contests to great advantage. It adds +10 to all melee attacks, and in unarmoured combat +20. It should be treated as an enchanted weapon, and strikes as a magic.

Jonty & Moel - Boastful of their adventures with Gudo (one to be exact), albeit aided by the Rohrim, their imaginations tend to wander, causing people to wonder if they are making up stories. As they are generally unassuming though, the statements they make are normally justified (if they say there are woses outside, there are woses outside).

Älter, Ebner, & Rohmer - have been friends of Rhölen and Elron since childhood. They are all fine warriors, and have served their peoples on several occasions, including the rebellion against Seuron. Neither one of them have spouses, and so spend a lot of their time together, either at the Inn or hunting and fishing. Most of their catches are offered to Gärlen (not including woses), for which they are given a free meal and a couple of pints to wash it down with.

Unlike some Rohrim, they do not stray away making temporary sites to live on. They do all their herding and farming at home (about 5 miles east of here), and rely on rumours or council summons before they will venture away to do better, rather than actively seeking activity.

As warriors, they know no magic, and are very wary of anyone who makes use of such. They do not associate with the card players who frequent the Inn, and are somewhat stand-offish toward strangers, unless cause is given to associate with them.

As do most Rohrim warriors, they wear chain mail, leather arm & leg greaves and metal helmets. They normally wield any combination of: Hand-axe, Broadsword, Bole, Pole-arm or Mounted Lance (the foremost and latter being favourite). They get a +20 melee CB, whilst fighting from horseback. They each have a warhorse in the stable, and a shield which they go nowhere without.

They often show an interest in Rhölen's shield, wondering why Gärlen presented it to him, and why he doesn't use it.

The Rohim are not planning on staying the night.

Gard School - 4 men of Dunedan blood, they are well familiar with the uses of magic, though they do not let it interfere with their card playing or other pastimes. If approached properly, they can be very friendly. They are somewhat impatient and are prone to act swiftly in resolving sticky situations.

Their arrogance may sometimes lead them, and they may easily upset people they consider inferior to themselves... it is this disposition that forced them to move away from their own lands, instead relying on the shelter of the forest. They will often mock the Rohrim reputation as warriors, knowing that most Rohim do not behold the use of magic.

Gambing is their main vice and they will try to ensure a constant flow of money, with the attitude of 'what's yours is mine', and so resort to theft.

The remaining 4 horses belong to these men.

The Woses - Though gifted beyond all doubt in the fine skills of carving and plant lore, they still find it necessary to study the workmanship and lore of elves and ents for tuton in these arts.

This particular party is a party of female artists who, in spite of the imagery they create with their painted bare bodies, were obviously not camouflaged enough, allowing the halflings to detect them.

They have just been out studying the Ents in the forest (accompanied by a couple of warriors naturally), where they were learning the arts of wood lore. They have so far been able to install life into stone statues they make to guard their camps (pulsar men), but they have not mastered this art in wood, and so study each and every move the Ents make.

It is probably the fact that these 'ugly painted' beings are feared by ents, that led the Rohrim to assume they were hunting ents.

ANIMALS

Great Spiders

These monsters, though akin to Sholeb, are cruel mongrels of both Spider and Fall Beast. Her Ladyship Sholeb seduced the said Fall Beast, offering it a seat in her kingdom, and spawned these offspring. When she discovered the lack of potential these creatures had, she had them banished (at birth), and sent forth to Feigorn Forest, where they should remain until such time as they might prove themselves.

These offspring aren't nearly as intelligent as Sholeb's other spawnings, as a result of which they are not gifted with the use of magic, but they do appreciate what she likes and dislikes. So, when they learnt of her desire to capture Romil, they formed a sort of posse to seek him out and take him back to their Queen and mistress.

In spite of their mis-shapen feet, they do enjoy the use of pincers, which are located one at either side of the fore-quarters, and are as effective as any one handed slashing weapon.

One of their main qualities is that they are venomous, and their bite can be quite fatal. The quality of their venom is equal to that of 'Sloth' (see Poisons table).

The clever PC might decide to extract this venom from the creatures, for which extra experience points would be warranted. This is of course if they have something with which to extract it and carry it in, and the expertise...

These spiders are naturally cowards, and because of this, they make snikes out of their webs, covering whole buildings. This occurs after they employ gives them the tactical bonus that people trying to leave the buildings are likely to escape one by one, allowing the spiders to 'pick them off'. This is of course if they don't get completely caught up in the web. If so, the spiders will take them away with them, leaving them in a cocoon, to preserve them until such time as they are hungry.

It should be noted that these spiders, due to their weak digestion system, only eat fresh food, and so will not eat dead animals. Nor will they eat anyone they have bitten, since their poison will be equally as effective on them, if digested.

Fall Beast

Due to their vast size (20'-30'), they are more than capable of supporting the weight of 1-2 men in flight. Their wingspan is equally as large as their body.

Unlike most winged predators, they don't have the aquatic beak one might expect of such huge birds. Their weaponry system is unique, in that they employ '6' fangs, which are set in a more reptilian shaped head, and 6' claws. Using their outstretched claws, they make easy prey of any target they get sight on (impaling them), whilst making a fast dive out of the skies.

Cerebis

Their excellent vision allows them a +50 to perception whilst in the air.

They are akin to the corvidae (carrion), and are as swift as could be expected of a winged animal, making the ideal choice for Romil's 'familiar'.

Meeress

Rohrim 'super horses', which are more than average in intelligence, and so prove ideal warhorses. It is unknown for anyone other than a Rohrim to own one of these fine horses, and anyone else in possession of such a horse would arouse suspicion.

Name:	Form/Prep:	Cost:	Effect:	Difficulty (to find):
Burthalea	stick/brew	110gp	Repairs shattered bones and joints.	Extremely Hard (-30)
Kalventari	berry/apply	19gp	Heals 1st & 2nd deg. burns, 1-10 hits resulting from heat.	Light (+10)
Arian	leaf/apply	13gp	Heals 4-9 hits.	Easy (+20)
Rawk	nodule/brew	9gp	Heals 2-20 hits.	Light (+10)
Thurl	clove/brew	1gp	Heals 1-4 hits.	Routine (+30)
Yaran	polenta/ingest	9gp	Acute smell & taste (For 1 hour).	Easy (+20)
Slate	spider/peate	36gp	Poison (M 5) slow (1 day) paralysis and death.	Extremely Hard (-30)

Note: Burthalea and Yaran found in short grass areas; Kalventari and Arian found in tall grass areas, Rawk, Thurl and Slate found in Deciduous/Mixed Forest.

WITHIN THE MAW OF THE FLOATING PREDATOR,
THE WFO MATERIALISES:

INEVITABLY

HELLO...
ARE YOU
ON CEBIT
TEN? 333
HELLO...
333 33 33
I'M GOING TO SEND THE THING THROUGH!
3333333333
PLEASE STAND CLEAR
3333333333
TRANSPORTING

WELL, THERE GOES ANOTHER ROSE.
THAT ONE WAS
SILK-LINED, TOO.

12/10/2015

ALL EMPLOY GOLDPOT
REMOTE NUDGE TO DELECT THE REVEREND'S FAULT

UN
COB!

FOUND
HILL

COULD YOU
PLEASE BE QUICK, AS
IT'S 3:45.
I AM ABOUT TO BE ARRESTED.

BUMP, SCRAPE

PRESENTLY, IN THE LOUNGE.

WILLIAM MAYNARD THORNTON
NEW YORK
APR 17

I REGRET THAT YOU WERE ARRESTED AS MY ACCOMPLICES. I MERELY EXPLAINED THE FACTS OF THE MATTER AND THEY CHARGED ME WITH ABDUCTION.

YERK!
THAT ASSHOLE WAS ABUSED
BY LOSE
MY DEPOINT!

1992-1993

...ILLEGAL PRACTICE OF MAGIC, CREATING A THOROUGHFARE WITHOUT PLANNING, PERMISSION, RELEASE OF NOXIOUS FUMES IN AN URBAN AREA, DRINKING AFTER CURFEW, AND THE BUTCHERS SHOULD TAKE A DIM VIEW OF THE UNLICENSED IMPORTAN
SLAVERY IN LIVESTOCK

NEXT: COURT IN THE ACT

VOYAGES BEYOND

by Wendy Graham

Whether Dr Who now, I wonder, with the news that Colin Baker will not be returning as the Doctor in the next series. Whether you think that what happened over Christmas substantiates what I said in the last issue or not, I feel that events such as this indicate that Who is in deep trouble, and for many of its fans (including me) will never be the same again.

Perhaps the BBC's attitude to SF and SF fans was best exemplified by Michael Grade, when I caught him appearing live on that new talkback show 'Open Air', saying that Science Fiction fans were a very vocal minority of viewers, dismissing us all by implication as sort of loud-mouthed idiots.

Bear in mind, however, when you weigh Grade's remarks that he also said that Eastenders is a very noisy show, which brought a gasped 'you must be joking' comment from one of his own presenters. Anyway the great God thing does not bear him out. For as long as I could be bothered to keep the cuttings, Star Trek (on at a dreadful time of 6pm on BBC 2) still managed to appear every week in the channel's ratings, for its second season, in 1985. If memory serves, it even occasionally reached as high as number five. Not bad for the slot, and for a 20-year-old show which has already been seen over here a number of times.

Most Science Fiction fans are sensible enough to realise that getting decent material onto the screen costs a fortune in terms of the technical side, but surely not all Science Fiction comes into the Star Wars category? A superb piece of the genre with hardly a blue screen in sight was the understated Dominick Hide story - The Filpoids of Dominick Hide and Another Filp for Dominick. Quality stuff, of which I would love to see more (while I'm on the subject, has anyone else noticed how alike are actor Peter Firth who played Dominick and Colin Baker? Now there's an idea for another Filp. Baker playing Dominick's son...)

Anyone out there know the writers, Jeremy Paul and Alan Gibson?

Finally on the subject of Dr Who, I hear that two Labour Euro MPs have written to BBC chief Alastair Milne pressing him to cast a woman in the title role next time around. They think a lady Time Lord would help break down the barriers for women in high tech jobs.

On his cold January day, that thought hasn't half warmed me, by reducing me to near helpless laughter. Not the idea of a woman playing the part, but the idea of it making any difference to women's career choices and option!

STATESIDE

News from the States department: The new Twilight Zone series got canned again, for the third time in a year. It is reputedly the best Science Fiction on over there at present, but I've not heard of any planned showings over here. I saw a couple of episodes, including one written by David Gerrold when he came to a Convention over here last year, and thought them excellent and very much carrying on the genre of the old series. (Between the two episodes there was a poignant advert for an airline featuring William Shatner and Leonard Nimoy.)

Starman is based on the film and is 'incredibly talky and dull', even with Robert Hays in the title role, writes my informant, John Peel.

The Wizard is very variable, between fun and dreadful, but with David Rappaport as the star it's always worth seeing just for him.

John, who amongst other things compiles such items as the Star Trek Files, and other Files series which appear over here in specialist shops (he's done a prolific 100 in two years), also passes on the news that the Trek TV series is still on, planned for 1988. Opening with a two hour TV movie, 24 episodes are planned. The title is Star Trek - The Next Generation, set 100 years after Star Trek itself and on the Enterprise, but that's all the news released so far. Except, of course to wonder a) if it really will be made, and b) will we see it, and if we do, on which channel?

Turning to books now, and a general comment on publishing trends, on which I've commented also in a couple or so of this month's reviews. I've noticed recently a lack of tight editing in some of the books which have been appearing recently. What I mean is long and tedious passages where the eyes continue to read but the brain idles along with the story and which should have been deleted at birth. One gets the feeling that the author loved them. The editor should have dealt with them though and hasn't, which was a shame. What do you think?

THE GREAT DEBATE

On the debate on what is Science Fiction (and boy did I feed some nibbles there!) I checked in my Concise Oxford

Above: 'Doctor Who'
Photo © Wendy Graham

Dictionary and the definition therein (which presumably is the 'official' one): 'Fanciful fiction dealing with space travel, life on other planets etc.' Hmmmm. That I think gets today's star non-existent prize as the worst definition so far. Best so far prize goes to Tim Ellis, who's suggestion is firmly grounded in reality.

Two letters in Adventurer #6 took me to task for comments made in my column on Star Trek's 20th birthday. Both correspondents seem to have missed my point that Star Trek is 20 years old and American TV 20 years ago was incredibly restricted in what could be shown. It was only under the guise of Science Fiction that they were allowed to comment. Remember the rules about no double beds, and one person having to keep their foot on the floor? And of course there was no open-mouthed kissing allowed. The struggle that the makers of Gone with the Wind had to keep intact the 'I don't give a damn' line is well known, and as good an example as any of the sanitising which was done by such as the NBC Broadcasting Standards Office - for some examples see The Making of Star Trek by Stephen E Whitfield. That same attitude meant that they couldn't have as wide a mix of races and colours as they would want if they were casting today. They had to fight hard enough to save Spock.

Even today American TV is probably much more bland than our own, but 20 years ago it was all I Love Lucy, and stuff like that. Books and the stage have nearly always been ahead of television and films, when it comes down to extending the boundaries.

Anyway, keep sending in your definitions, and I'll ask every Science Fiction writer I encounter for his or her definition and pass them on, as well.

Finally, I have no particular reason for including this group shot from Blakes 7, apart from the fact that I found it in my photo file and thought it might annoy the BBC!

REVIEWS

The Continent of Lila.

by James Morrow.

Published by Arrow.

£2.50 Paperback.

A cephalope is a dreambeast, a sort of vegetable, a pre-programmed dose of LSD. Each cephalope, when eaten, delivers to the eater a cross between a really believable dream and a good movie.

Since the dreamer lives in the dream, it follows that much care must be taken in the choosing of those who create the dreams. James Morrow's book deals with what happens when a nutcase manages to create the ultimate horror dream and then finds somehim.

The cephalope tree must be traced and destroyed and the job lands with ace and pated (shemt) reviewer Quintinn.

Nice story, a Science Fiction whodunnit really, and well paced, apart from the bits where the good guys are travelling through the tree, which I found a real yawn.

The War for Eternity.

by Christopher Rowley.

Published by Arrow

£2.95 Paperback.

Save your money, so far as I'm concerned. If this is stender than it's not worth fighting for.

I suppose that as a reviewer I should read everything that comes, on your behalf, but sometimes, dear reader, I can't be so noble. I couldn't get further than the first few pages of what the blurb calls 'A brilliant epic of interstellar war', if I'm missing something wonderful perhaps someone would be kind enough to tell me, but, until then, no thanks.

Go!gotha Falls.

by Frank DeFelitta.

Published by NEL

£2.95 Paperback.

One thing which seems common among Science Fiction authors is their mistrust of many organised religions, so this book, which I think must be classed as fantasy, and by the author

one to grow it for

of Fair Love of Audrey Rose, isn't really, strictly in the Science Fiction or Fantasy categories. For it is more of a pro-religious account of a confrontation between good and evil, Roman Catholic Church and the Devil.

Not being much of a one for supernatural or horror books, which some publishers lump in with Science Fiction and Fantasy and send to me and which are beyond my interest and brief, I generally dodge them (I need a good night's sleep...) but I did read this one, and must report that it is one of those rare books which makes the eyes go wide and the mouth say wow as you reach the last page.

Sure it is a bit tedious at times, but generally it is a powerful tale, whether you believe in the Prince of Darkness or not.

The Wizards and the Warriors. Chronicle of the Darkness (Volume 1)

by Hugh Cook.

Published by Corgi

£2.95 Paperback.

That volume I stuff in small print on the corner should warn you, though there's nothing inside which gives the game away, but I happen to know thanks to a friendly warning from a publisher's PR that this is the first in a series of 20, yes, Twenty books.

This is a standard Wizards sort of book. Nothing really special about it. Could use hard editing at time and expanding at others, as people you thought had been killed suddenly re-appear with the barest of explanations, if any.

Above: 'Blake's Seven'
Photo © Wendy Graham

Personally I'm getting rather bored with wizards.

Nerilka's Story and The Coelura.

by Anne McCaffrey.

Published by Bantam.

£8.95 Hardback.

Two Novellas in one volume. Nerilka's Story runs parallel to the events of Moreta, Dragonlady of Pern, and tells the story of the pandemic which ravaged the planet from the viewpoint of a Lady frosty of Fort Hold and then of Ruatha.

Ms McCaffrey once told me that sometimes she doesn't know why certain things happen in her Pern books until later when she finds it all fits in - Firebrands are a good example, and once checking this book against Moreta she did it again. Nerilka's story was right in there, waiting to pop up, just as Jacom's did after a passing mention of the hatching of the white dragon.

It is par for the course for me that I loved Nerilka, but I confess I wasn't that taken with The Coelura, the second story, which is set in a new part of Anne's other universe, that of the FSP. It is one of those stories which will add weight to those who call her the Barbara Cartland of Science Fiction.

in print before.

righted - a 1971

published in Great Britain as Ground Zero Men in 1976. It is very much a contemporary story. A brilliant but unassuming and unlearned mathematician has an attack of the eureka! And comes up with the theorem which will enable him to build a device which will spread like a molecular AIDS through the nuclear weapons world, causing them all to detonate after he presses the button.

Therefore everyone must disarm, and quickly. Naturally they don't want to, so much of the book is concerned with them seeking hero Lucius Hutchmen for something a little more vigorous than a cosy chat.

I like the idea, but found it difficult to accept in places that the hero was quite so brilliant - not in the flash which gave him the theory, for such things certainly do happen, the original eureka situation being the best known example, but when Hutchman then went out and sort of Knocked together the device virtually his bathroom I began to wonder. And I got sick and tired of his sly relationship with his neurotic wife.

Maybe Shaw could go back and look again at the idea, get rid of the wife and give Hutchman an engineer friend. For once I think that the story could be longer too.

it is first copy-and it was first

Britain as Ground

Zero Men in 1976. It is very much a contemporary story. A brilliant but unassuming and unlearned mathematician has an attack of the eureka! And comes up with the theorem which will enable him to build a device which will spread like a molecular AIDS through the nuclear weapons world, causing them all to detonate after he presses the button.

Therefore everyone must disarm, and quickly. Naturally they don't want to, so much of the book is concerned with them seeking hero Lucius Hutchmen for something a little more vigorous than a cosy chat.

I like the idea, but found it difficult to accept in places that the hero was quite so brilliant - not in the flash which gave him the theory, for such things certainly do happen, the original eureka situation being the best known example, but when Hutchman then went out and sort of Knocked together the device virtually his bathroom I began to wonder. And I got sick and tired of his sly relationship with his neurotic wife.

Maybe Shaw could go back and look again at the idea, get rid of the wife and give Hutchman an engineer friend. For once I think that the story could be longer too.

one who is a PR for the CEGH could ever write such funny stuff - as someone who had to wade through the stodge of nationalised industry's PR's idea of good press release for it seems like many years. How on earth does Mr. P do it?

This time the latest in the Discworld's 'n-ology' deals and debunks one of the classic clichés - why are witches women, warlock and wizards men? Why can't a woman be a Wizard? Why shouldn't Ekkanra be admitted to the Unseen University? You can tell, by the way, that this book follows on from the other two, since the Librarian at the University likes bananas, though he and death (well as phlegmatic as ever), are the only continuing characters. And if you don't know what I'm talking about, shame on you for you should most certainly have read the other two books, and you should read this one.

Free Live Free.

by Gene Wolfe.

Published by Arrow

£2.95 Paperback.

Starts well this book, but by the time the finale approached I was still reading it pretty much for the sake of finally finishing it - you know the Meistermind Syndrome, 'I've started so I'll finish'. A nice idea which got buried under a blanket of over-convulsion.

The Postmen.

by David Brin.

Published by Bantam.

Paperback.

After reading one of David Brin's earlier books The Pretence Effect, I found I didn't mind doing the housework so much - after all, I was practicing the vacuum cleaner to a state where I only had to look at it and the house would immediately become immaculate.

This time I've been eyeing my postman with a new respect. Now admittedly the Postman of the title isn't a GPO bod, but an ordinary holocaust survivor in the US of A, who finds that taking on the mantle of a descendant of the pony Express turns into a unifying factor for, within the scope of the novel, the remnants of the States.

It is a tale which sets one thinking - who would be the leaders after the bomb drops or whatever? Would it be the bureaucrats and the military as they themselves think, or would it be someone as... ordinary... as a postman, simply because a postman can bring people into contact once again, and gains a certain respect from his job?

Wendy

The Peace Machine.

by Bob Shaw.

Published by Grafton

(under the Panther SF imprint.)

£2.50 Paperback.

This Bob Shaw tale has been around for some time and made many appearances

Equal Rites.

by Terry Pratchett.

Published by Victor Gollancz.

£9.95 Hardback.

Great, another discworld story, to follow on from - the delicious 'Colour of Magic' and 'Light' - ways surprises me that some-

Scatophagium Campaign

BY ROBIN PARRY & STE DILLON

OUT & ABOUT

INTRODUCTION:

The following article is brought to you from the notes of Incantor Whak, which first became available to Adventurer readers in issue #6. Whilst not necessary to possess back issues of Adventurer, the Scotophagium scenarios are designed to be more enjoyable when played as part of the campaign. For those already enjoying the benefits of this detailed land, we take up our magnifying glass this issue to investigate the flora and fauna of the surrounding countryside.

THE FRONTIER MOVES SOUTHWARD:

Scotophagium has traditionally been seen as the Southern outpost of civilization, but has now been recognised as an established town, surrounded by cleared and cultivated land. The pioneering spirit (amongst humankind) has moved south to new territories, and is now embodied in Equilatrix, a small, newly established area which neighbours Escar. The town is overseen by priests of Imephrath, who are involved in the construction of an abbey/agricultural college, and are establishing their vineyards.

FLORA:

The most common plants growing generally in the Scot area are nettles, brambles, wild rose, etc. (Helping to form the impression of a Thorny, harsh, bitter landscape). More localised plants include Nobnut (a spiky, gorse-like shrub which grows up to 8' high), Greater Black Wormwood (elliptical herb used extensively in healing), Pussthorn (dense growths of upright, straight stalks bearing long thorns - similar to Blackthorn, except a scratch from this will become inflamed and secrete festering puss!) An embote sometimes grows nearby, but this is rare, and needs a well-trained eye to find

Pussthorn Thickets:

Pussthorn thickets are a fairly common feature of Scotophagium countryside, appearing as dense areas of dark, upright stems which grow closely together, to a height of about 12'. These can cover areas up to 100' in diameter, in suitable conditions, but are usually restricted to 30' to 60'. The slender thorny trunks form an all but impenetrable barrier. There are open areas within these thickets, caused by the annual death of old thickets, and so can provide secure, barnacled dwellings for the occasional creature, who can burrow their way in from underneath.

Travelling adventurers have followed this example set by nature, and can sometimes be found sheltering within the thorny walls. Access is gained by enlarging the burrows of previous residents and building a door of some kind. Occasionally, the open areas within the thicket may interconnect to form a series of "rooms", often with an opening in the walls, forming an archlike doorway.

Thickets within thickets have been found, where as the old growth spreads out over a wide area, open spaces are left within the thicket, where fresh new growth often springs up, usually at the centre of the "forest".

Some thickets that are adjacent to well-travelled routes will be found to contain the evidence of a previous occupation, some may still be occupied! Many of these temporary shelters are quite well set up, with moss beds arranged in sheltered nooks, with woven thickets to secure entrances, and skin awnings arranged to provide shelter. Small hearths built of stone have to be carefully controlled in this woody environment, to prevent possible thorn-fires.

TREES:

There are few areas of woodland of any great size in the vandy; these have been mainly denuded as a source of building timber, fire wood, ship bodies, etc. Also, these have been cleared as a matter of policy, for the fewer forests around, the fewer the opportunity for 'hies' to lurk.

Local trees commonly encountered include maple (sugar maple - used for spears, the sap for syrup [1-4% sucrose]), Red Maple and Sycamore maple, Rowan, Ash, Lime, Oak, Birch, Elder (used for wine), Cork (used for furniture, relts, etc.). These are all deciduous, so their bloom depends on the season, which should be borne in mind for any ongoing campaign.

Some Coniferous trees include Larch and Fulthees pine (a bit like Scots pine, but known as the "Boo Tree" as it usually resembles the silhouette of someone shouting "BOO!", with their hands up!)

This can cause a nasty fright to an unsuspecting traveller, particularly at night-time, when the tree can almost seem to move.

Some timber is exported, but only rare and valuable woods are profitably shipped out. However, timber products are a different matter, eg "Ardourbark" is an aphodiasac of which crystallizes under the bark of "Cupole" trees (a relative of Camphor and Ginseng trees), which are now found only east of Scot, where the lumber industry still flourishes. The workers are supposed to declare all ardourbark they find, to the Scot-based company, but there is a thriving black market, usually controlled by the timber village overseers. Parties of impoverished adventurers have been known to accept employment by rich timber merchants in order to infiltrate these lumber encampments. Their aim is to find out just who is selling how much of this very valuable substance, and to whom.

The work in these lumberjack type places, found about 30 miles east of Scot, is hard and poorly paid. The wood is lashed into rafts and floated down the Scot river. The workers are periodically harassed by brigands and the like (both human and non-human), as well as by wild creatures. Amongst the latter enemies of the workers is the Boring Beetle, which will attack a man and goe swiftly into him if their trees are molested.

One notable, if uncommon tree is the Enrulkan Morace, or Beggar's Fig, which is similar to the Banyan Tree. This variety will tolerate a cooler climate, although Escobar is as far north as it will grow. Reaching heights of up to 100', the aerial roots grow down from its spreading branches to penetrate the ground, becoming a stiff like stem which produces its own roots to enhance growth. These form small thickets of densely packed stems and roots, usually with spaces in between this mesh of growth, wherein numerous creatures have been known to take up residence. Not least of these are paupers and pilgrims, although some rather more predatory types may be encountered, such as snakes and bears.

Certain creatures with the ability to blend in with the natural background would be difficult to detect within the confines of the morace, and could well be looking unbeknownst to any adventurer seeking shelter.

The entrances to underground lairs are occasionally located within the thickets created by this tree. The Morace provides a reasonably secure shelter for the beleaguered traveler, and can contain the possessions of a previous visitor, or even the visitor himself (dead or alive.)

FAUNA:

The predominant creatures in the Scot area (apart from humans), are rodents (rats, rabbits and badgers), canines (wolves and foxes), some wild herd animals (deer, goats, and some wild sheep), birds (hawks, owls, sparrows, etc., etc.). There are a small number of wild horses occasionally found in the hills to the south, though these are rare. Reptiles such as snakes and lizards are also fairly common.

More exotic inhabitants of the area in general include Wild Boar, black and brown Bears, Giant Eagles, Giant Owls, Giant Toads, Antelope, wild Cattle, Large Lizards and the odd Lynx, all of which have provided countless hours of enjoyment to the visiting adventurer.

INSECTOIDS/ARTHROPODS:

Most common insects exist in Scot including ants, beetles, dragonfly, wasps, etc. There is also a good selection of Giant forms, usually tied to a specific location, though these may be encountered at random, usually seeking prey. The most notable of these giant insects include Dragonflies and Stag-beetles, and can be rather nasty!

The Singing Beetle: This creature is worthy of note because of its peculiar talent of emitting an ululating call, which sounds much like a human song or wail, without words. A huge insect with extremely hard exo-skeleton, this creature will sometimes inhabit puss-thorn thickets or Morace trees, lunging prey towards it with its strange call. It is (naturally) cannibalous, and will emit a final blast of sound when its prey is within about 10' (or when it is hit). This blast of sound rapidly ascends into the ultrasonic range, temporarily stunning all who hear it, within a 10 yard range.

The Singing Beetle is about 4' high and a yard broad, with powerful mandibles that can dismember even an armoured character swiftly. This all depends, of course, on whether it can get to its prey, as it is a very slow-moving critter, and very much out of depth when not lurking in its hidey-hole. It has wings but does not fly, except to locate a lar, or if necessary to escape death. Even then, its flight is cumbersome and slow.

The Singing Beetle.

The pregnant female of the species will lay her eggs in secluded spots, which hatch out to produce large grubs up to 2' in length. These in turn pupate into nymphs of about 5' or 6'. It is in this guise that the creature is most deadly; voracious and rapid, they devour all the vegetation in their path, and then metamorphose into the final form of the Beetle.

OUT AND ABOUT IN SCATOPHAGUM:

The party have, for whatever reason the GM's campaign decides, elected to end on one of Scatophagum's most famous tourist attractions: the guided tour of the countryside. More of an expedition than an excursion, this trip usually lasts for about three weeks, and many of Scat's wealthy and studious personalities have ventured at least once, if only for the esteem and the great insight to the area that this commands. The guide, none other than Incantor Whek himself, is a celebrated scholar of the region's history; in the spring and autumn, when there is more chance of survival.

The following is given as a preamble to the adventure, but with a little modification by the GM, the facts may be given to the players while they are actually on the adventure (assuming, of course, they decide to go along with it...)

"The excursion you are about to embark on is an exciting journey, if somewhat plagued with minor difficulties. Most people find this an exhilarating and memorable trip, and the fatality rate is kept down to about 25%, so you stand a very good chance of survival!

"We will, of course, be visiting the great outdoors around the town of Scatophagum. If you refer to the map in your guide books, you will note that the countryside consists generally of scrubby grassland, interspersed with copes of young trees, solitary oaks, rocky outcrops and grassy knolls. Small woods of Ash and Birch provide homes for birds and animals.

"The higher ground contains Ling and Heather, moorland and heath, with isolated Rowan trees and the odd Fulness Pine. The rock formations consist of weathered crags, Monadnocks (isolated hills or rock masses) and buttes, which rise majestically as enormous flat-topped hills.

"The Coastal areas around Scat tend to have shingle beaches, in which we must be careful to avoid the deadly pinners of the burrowing shrimp-wits. For this reason, adequate footwear must be worn at all times!

"Near the estuary of the River Scat are found shaly black mud-flats, often treacherous to adventurers who presume it to offer a solid grounding.

"To the west of Scat, at the Crumpeil, and North, on the Frith, are steep cliff faces which project out into the Sea. We will also be visiting some of the Sea Caves in the area, many of which are found in these cliff faces.

"Also on our travels, I will point out to you some of the larger woods and forests, which consist of Oak, Birch, Maple Ash and some Conifers. You will notice that within these larger woods and some smaller forests will be areas of Old Woodland where huge trees stand amongst the decaying debris of their fellows. These are generally quiet and eerie places, favoured by creatures of dark disposition, so I would advise caution if you should wander too closely to their pavements. And I must insist when we get there that we all STICK TOGETHER.

"We will also come across good examples of marsh land which is scattered about, and the odd bog or swamp, which are normally found bordering streams or pools.

"A large swamp known as Drammach lies about 8 miles north of Scat. This is bordered on the SW by steep hills which we shall have to trek, using the Clawth Ferry Road. You will see this marked on your guide map. These hills are bleak and unfriendly, and I must warn you that many of the local legends say that this area is reported ward sightings out across the dismal swamp. Now, many of you might feel that these rumours are just as a tourist attraction, but nevertheless, this is one more place where we must Stick Together, especially if our course takes us there after dusk, which by Menud I hope it does not!

"It is in this area that many good wagons have been known to run off the road and the frequent fog occurrences near the swamp. These have a tendency to cause downhill, into the swamp itself, a fate which would leave the boldest paladin looking for his brown trousers!

"Drammach is only negotiable by foot if the traveller knows the correct and convoluted way through; fortunately for the party, I do. Passing from one dryish section to another, we will hopefully avoid the pools where water snakes and aquatic trolls lurk, submerged from sight, waiting to catch you unexpectedly. It is mainly for this reason that we bring Bolug along on these excursions. It is his job to later at the back of the party, ready to fend off any surprise lurches from behind. Bolug, of course, is gifted with the blessing that he is never surprised. Unfortunately, this does tend to quell his sense of humour somewhat. Nonetheless, a good deal of aquatic troll deaths are thanks to him.

"Over the wetter areas of the swamp, we will see strange lights glowing: these are harmless, but can be deadly if you know what I mean. These are rarely seen at the centre of the swamp, where we will not be going; our course merely skirts around the edge. Those foolish enough to attempt to traverse across the swamp seldom live to tell of it, those who have speak of animate vegetation and the mallow-grazing sounds of some howling ghoul or night.

"Now for a little history about the place, Drammach was the site of a massacre of a dark, demi-human people in the early days of Scatophagian settlement. There is a small chance that you may have heard of the fabled episode of the history of Scat's pioneering forefathers..."

(GM: there is more chance that the PCs have heard of the Adamantine weapons discovered in the swamp. These weapons are, for the most part, dark grey-blue swords of an unnaturally hard, stone-like mineral. They are about four feet long, which gently taper to a square point. They are perpetually sharp, but require periodic abrasive honing using diamond dust. This will help it achieve its miraculous cutting powers. Daggers, shields and other artefacts such as pieces of armour or jewellery have also been found, but such finds as these are extremely rare.)

"After our little trip to The Swamp, we will find an easier route back to Scat, where our trip will be rounded off with song and epic poetry. Here you will be able to buy small mementoes of your excursion, copies of my books on Scat history and folklore and the like. Now, is there any one who has had a change of heart and does not want to journey with us?"

The players may, at this point, decide that they know enough of Scat, to want to 'pull out' of this seemingly dangerous adventure. Of course, if they do, there can be no refund; they have effectively paid (highly) for the lecture. Of course, there is nothing wrong with 'pulling out' officially, and attempting to follow from a 'safe' distance, though Bolug may have to deal with anyone who gets too close.

The following extract will be quoted by Incorator Whisk as the party approach the swamp. It should not be divulged to players not engaged on the journey.

"The last remnant of the dark folk were herded into the swamp, Drammach, by superior force and then systematically destroyed by archers on the banks. Those that escaped the arrows and penetrated deeper into the marsh no doubt fell victim to the hand dividers of those murky pools. Lord Sine Verux, commanding a large force of cavalry, patrolled the hills to the south of the swamp, cutting down any survivors that tried to escape that way" 17,456, the History of the Verux Dynasty.

SCENARIO HOOKS:

These scenarios may be used whilst the players are accompanying Inceptor Whok on his guided tour, though if they are, we suggest the GM should divert the party away from the main group, an easy task in the wilds of Scat. Alternatively, the scenarios may be used as part of an adventure on their own, or when the party are 'on the road', travelling to the next town, escorting a wagon, etc. Feel free!

THE ROADS:

The Scat roads consist of packed earth and rocks with frequent pot-holes and obstacles such as fallen rocks and trees, sometimes deliberately placed by brigands to waylay travellers. Streams are crossed at fords or crude wooden bridges, except at the Brennit Road, where a stone bridge crosses a river tributary six miles out of Scat. All bridges and fords put travellers at a great risk, leaving them vulnerable to the numerous bands of bandits and rogues who infest the countryside. All the roads (except the quarry and South Coast roads) pass among agricultural lands, and are bordered by fields of hay and silage, root crops (usually turnip) and some bracken.

DRAMMACH:

The Swamp is reputed to be haunted, treacherous, and infested with huge centipedes. It presents a dour picture, with brown tussocky ground protruding from the beakish water. Isolated trees, mostly dead, stand at odd angles here and there, supporting the occasional buzzard. At the NW extremity of the marsh stands a malevolent Old Willow.

Several years ago, a merchant's wagon, pursued by brigands, was galled by frightened horses into one of the pools near the center. Surprisingly, the horses managed to remain on firm ground for over half a mile before plunging into an exceptionally deep pool. The horses were quickly disposed of by the Drammach residents, but the wagon remains submerged, partially preserved by the alkaline waters. It contains the merchant's possessions, including a strongbox and a variety of ceramic and glass bottles/vials, containing the oils, unguents and tonics that were the merchant's trade. An aquatic troll and his mate have found the sludgy area beneath the wagon a desirable residence.

Searching and excavation for the relics of the dark folk/massacre victims is a slow and dangerous job. A small chance exists of finding a piece of armour, probably still containing a portion of skeleton, to which will adhere clods of partially preserved wrinkled pale flesh. A smaller chance exists of finding a sword or shield, and possibly even an artefact such as a talisman or valuable jewel, though this is extremely unlikely, requiring many hours of patient and organised excavation. Such investigation would require diving skills, or the aid of diving or prayer, and Drammach, deadly during the daylight, becomes much worse of a night.

THE OLD QUARRY:

Located about 5 miles north of Scat, this disused quarry is now half-filled with water. The quarry sides go down to about 40' into the water, and the edges are treacherous to those standing too close. The quarry is about 175' in diameter and nearly 100' deep in places (half of which is below water).

The quarry is disused due to the presence of Rockweevils, peculiarly adapted beetles that have bored their way deep into the stone, rendering it worthless as masonry. A block of it can easily crumble under weight, because of the honeycombed effect caused by the beetle's activities. This may not be readily apparent from the outside, of course.

The Rock Weevil is plagued with a parasite known as the Blotch Mite, which burrows under the weevil's exo-skeleton and lives within it, eventually driving the weevil to erratic and aggressive behaviour. The Blotch Mite is so named because it can infest humans coming into contact with an affected Beetle, and forms colonies under the skin, which appear as purple blotches. The mites secrete a substance into the victim's bloodstream. This secretion causes complacency towards the blotches and irritations at first, but the irritation swiftly becomes a distraction so great that the victim will exhibit sudden outbursts of violence and self-destructive behaviour. The victim's mind is dulled by the mite's secretions, and tormented physically to an unbearable degree. A character coming into contact with an infested person stands a chance of becoming infested also.

The infestation takes a week or so to set in. The blotches gradually appear over this period, with outbursts becoming more frequent as time goes by. The victim's complacency (caused by the mite's secretion), and outbursts of violence and aggression, make him an unsuitable subject for healing spells.

An unlucky bandit who chose the wrong victim has had the tables turned on him, and has been paid for his troubles with an outbreak of purple blotches! Of course, he doesn't know that his malady is anything more than a skin rash.

If the party encounter the bandit, and do not kill him outright, he will offer to ransom himself by revealing the fact that he has a reasonable stash hidden in the Old Quarry. Besides the unforeseen danger of the mites, the quarry banks are crumbling and threatening a fall into the waters below.

If someone is unlucky enough to become contaminated by Blotch Mite, a cure is available, and it might even be possible to find out about it. The treatment involves a poultice of Greater Black Wormwood, and Singing Beetle eggs. The Greater Black Wormwood isn't too difficult to locate, as it grows wild, if not commonly, favouring old sites of habitation (perhaps planted there for its healing properties).

The Beetle eggs are a little more difficult to find, however, but there are some who claim that the grubs and nymphs have been seen at the Roads To Nowhere, an ancient site east of the Brennit Road.

THE ROADS TO NOWHERE:

A set of broad and level roadways, apparently composed of huge slabs of grey stone. Two main stretches cross each other and are about a mile long and 2 yards wide. Running around the ends is an oval stretch of roadway composed of the same uniform slabs, but 15 yards wide. The slabs are about 5 yards square and are neatly mortared together with little sign of a join. The area around the roadways is scattered with ruins of old buildings; some were huge, judging by the evidence of their foundations. Some were smaller but extend beneath the surface, into bunkers made of the same stone as the roadways.

Amongst these ruins are to be found the eggs, grubs and nymphs of the Singing Beetle, in enormous numbers, and perhaps a full-grown Beetle or two.

Environment of Scat.

Climate: temperate
Rainfall: moderate (625-750 mm annually)

Prevailing winds: North Westerly, from the Ledone Sea.

Sea Currents: the Ledrone tide flows from West to East between the island of CHAWTH and SCATMOUTH.

Temperature: Varies (-5°C to 15°C).

Morphology/Landscape: Generally Plains and Ancient Ford mountains. (More details on the map provided with issue #5 of Adventurer).
Common Minerals: Iron and copper, with some sulphur.

Land Cover: Bann heath and peat bogs as well as some agricultural land in the lowlands. The upland, or hilly regions, consist of grass moorland/sub-alpine vegetation.

Agriculture: Hay and Silage, and extensive root crops, consisting mainly of turnips.

Population: Humans primarily, with other humanoid settlements.

ELLERY QUEEN'S MYSTERY MAGAZINE GAME

Mayfair Games, Inc.
PO BOX 48533
NILES, IL 60068

THE GAME IS AFOOT!
Now YOU can be the detective. You and your friends can solve the five mysteries included in the game. Regular supplemental casebooks will contain more mysteries to solve. For 1-5 players, ages twelve to adult.

£12.95/$17.00

For details of all MAYFAIR products, and address of your nearest stockist in Europe, send to: GAMES OF LIVERPOOL LTD, 89 VICTORIA STREET, LIVERPOOL L1 6DG

OFF THE WALL ARMIES

Fantasy miniatures have never been this much fun! Off-the-Wall Armies features a unique collection of 25mm figures from improbable and humorous armies.

These figures may also be used with any fantasy RPG.

ZANY ARMIES ON THE MARCH!

HIGHLANDERS

Scottish Highland badgers
Intensity (2 figs)

2100 Command Group	£1.95	2102 Officer	£1.95
2101 Footman Sword & Shield	£1.95	2103 Bowman	£1.95
2102 Footman Capesman in Chainmail	£1.95	2104 Bowman	£1.95
2103 Bowman in Leather Armour	£1.95	2105 Cavalry in Plate Armour	£1.95
2104 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95
2105 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95
2106 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95
2107 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95
2108 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95
2109 Cavalryman in Chainmail	£1.95

Cavalry (2 figs)

2110 LT Trooper with Sword	£2.95	2111 LT Trooper with Sword	£2.95
2112 HWY Trooper with Lance	£2.95	2113 HWY Trooper with Sword	£2.95

BUNRABDS

Flippant rabbits

2100 Officer	£1.95
2101 Bowman	£1.95
2102 Bowman	£1.95
2103 Cavalry in Plate Armour	£1.95

FRATERS DIVERSI

ROMULI REMQUE

Roman style wall-warriors

Assorted pack (1 of each)	£11.70
---------------------------	--------

2100 Officer	£1.95
2101 Bowman	£1.95

2102 Bowman	£1.95
2103 Cavalry in Plate Armour	£1.95

2104 Bowman	£1.95
2105 Cavalry in Plate Armour	£1.95

Gray Cat Castings

P.O. BOX 43253
AUSTIN, TX 78745

IN THE UNITED KINGDOM CONTACT: GAMES OF LIVERPOOL LTD, 89 VICTORIA STREET LIVERPOOL, 1. TEL: 051 236 2905
Available Mail Order from Games Of Liverpool. 10% off orders over £4 Order 5 packs or more - postage free in the U.K.

ADVERTISER INDEX

Company Name	Page	Company Name	Page
Columbia Games	13	KJC Games	6
Dagon	15	Leisure Games	13
Denizen Miniatures	14	Mayfair	55
Dragon Points	55	Otherworld Artifacts	15
F.G.U.	58	Pacesetter Games	63
FASA	35	Playtwice Ltd	56
G.D.W.	63	Prince August	15
Games Unlimited	14	Sloth Enterprises	7
Games World	4	Spirit of Adventure	14
Gamekeeper	4	TM Games	5
Gamemaster	4	TSR	64
Gray Cat Castings	55	Task Force Games	35
Grimlin Miniatures	7	The Games Shop	13
Grenadier U.K.	2	The Guildroom	4
I.C.E.	57	The Laboratory	55/56
Jade Games	14	The Portly Pixie	55
Shop Guide	14	Shop Guide	14

PURPOSE-BUILT RP CENTRE

LIVE ACTION INDEXES
TWO YEARS IN THE PLANNING!
OPENING SOON!
WE NEED YOUR HELP!

SEND OFF SET FOR PARTS
PARTY PACKAGES
160 HEARSAL LA
COVENTRY
CVS - 6HH.

DUNGEON CRAWLER PAINTS

The only FANTASY paints on the Market

2 Dungeon Black	11 Gem Stone Blue
3 Bleached Bone	12 Devil Red
7 Goblin Eye	14 Leather
8 Human Flesh	19 Slime Green

These are MATT ACRYLIC in easy to use jars.

Please mention Adventurer when replying to these advertisers.

All Equines and Cheques to
C A COHEN STANDARD PAINTS,
83 Meadow Lane, Leeds LS11 5DW

ROLE-PLAY FLOOR PLANS

"Wait!" said Imrahl, the Elf Lord stooped; bringing the flickering torchlight closer to the flagstone floor and the freshly carved runes

"Then it was as we thought" said Aviolan, "Her heart pounding with anticipation, "They do exist!"

"YES" said Imrahl hardly daring to believe "for here it is written, a new age is now upon us." Floor plans that will fire the imagination of Dungeon Masters everywhere and role-play will never be the same again for those who dare enter their domain. And dropping to his knees Imrahl uncovered the final rune and with a look of astonishment turned to Aviolan.

ONLY £2.50 "What does it say?" she implored.

YES IT'S TRUE! A new age in Role-Play floor plans! Inspirational and designed to offer the most versatile system yet.

Choice of two sets interior or exterior floor plans, both feature exciting new concept in floor plan design.

Each pack contains 12 cards, 18cm x 27cm printed in full colour onto high quality board.

What plans have you got for your next adventure!

Please send me _____ interior floor plan sets

_____ exterior floor plan sets

Total number of sets _____ @ £2.50

+45p P&P each for orders over 6 sets enclose £1.00 total for P&P

PLEASE ALLOW 21 DAYS FOR DELIVERY

I enclose cheque/P.O. for £ _____ made payable to Playtwice Ltd, PO Box 15, WEST

POO NOTTINGHAM NG7 2GE

Please print your name and address clearly on the reverse of your cheque or P.O.

Playtwice
LIMITED

Experienced players and Games Masters choose

Adventure

Now a major monthly feature in the U.K., Europe, Australia and the U.S.A.

One of the most exciting happenings in the 1986 gaming calendar was the birth and subsequent boom in the growth of this independant magazine from the U.K. Sporting superior artwork, the highest quality scenarios and articles, this magazine was made for YOU!

Available from most good stockists. If you can't see it, ask for it.

Just cut out this coupon and give to your local stockist

Dear Newsagent /Shopkeeper

Please reserve/deliver Adventure for me from issue ☐

Name: _____ Age: _____

Address: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

Also available in the U.K. from Mersey Leisure Publishing for £1.00 per issue or 6 issues for £5.50

Circle 10 on Reader Service Card

Fantasy Role - Playing products from IRON CROWN ENTERPRISES

Middle - Earth RPG

Middle - Earth Boxed Set	10.95
Middle - Earth Rulebook	6.95
Combat Screen	1.45
Folded Map	6.95
Guidebook	6.50

Campaign Modules

Anomir	7.95
Northern Mirkwood	7.95
Southern Mirkwood	7.95
Isengard	7.95
Moria	7.95
Rangers of the North	7.95
Riders of Rohan	7.95
Lorien	7.95

Adventure Modules

Bree	4.50
Dagorlad	4.50
Shelob's Lair	4.50
Hilmen	4.50
Thieves of Tharbad	4.50
Paths of the Dead	4.50
Goblin - Gate	4.50
Haunted Ruins	3.95
Trofe	3.95

New: Lords Of Middle Earth
Volume 1: The Immortals -
Elves, Males and Valor £8.95

Board Games

Fellowship of the Ring	24.95
Battle of Five Armies	9.95
Lonely Mountain	12.95
Riddle of the Ring	19.95

Rolemaster Series

Rolemaster	24.95
Rolemaster Companion	7.95
Arms Law & Claw Law	7.95
Spell Law	7.95
Character & Campaign Law	7.95
Creatures & Treasures	7.95

Rolemaster Series

Cloudlords	5.95
World of Vog Mur	3.95
Shade of the Sinking Plain	6.95
The Iron Wind	5.95

S.F. Games

Specmaster	24.95
Future Law	7.95
Tech Law	7.95
Imperial Cities	7.95
The Lost Telepaths	7.95

Available now at better games shops. In case of difficulty contact:
 Games of Liverpool, 40-42 Victoria Street, Liverpool 1 Tel 051 255 2266

From KJC Games, Britain's leading PBM CO.

AN OFFER YOU CAN'T REFUSE!

ABSOLUTELY FREE

TRY A FREE TRIAL IN THE WORLDS MOST POPULAR PLAY-BY-MAIL GAME.

IT'S A CRIME!

All you need to do is send us your name and address and we'll send you a rulebook, start position in a new game, and credit for your first two moves. If you enjoy the game, and we think you will, you can continue playing it's a Crime! for the incredibly low price of only 62.5p a turn.

THE SETTING

The game is set in New York City in the late 1990's. You role-play the part of a gangleader who controls a group of misguided youths. The city has severely deteriorated. The brave citizens who remain are now in a life and death struggle with the ever increasing number of drug-crazed street gangs. The New York Police Department is severely undermanned.

Your main goal is to become a very powerful gang. This is measured by building your gangs turf into one of the largest and by becoming one of the richest, toughest, and most notorious gangs in the city. This will allow you to enter the MOB, and maybe later, become the Godfather.

On a typical turn you could send your Pros, Punks and 'Cruits out to take over a couple of city blocks and ambush an enemy gang, rob or firebomb a building, buy and sell drugs, have yourselves a party, terrorize the residents, and much more.

SEND YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS TODAY FOR YOUR FREE TRIAL OF IT'S A CRIME! THE WORLDS MOST POPULAR PLAY-BY-MAIL GAME.

WRITE TO:

KJC GAMES,
PO BOX 11, CLEVELEYS, BLACKPOOL, LANCS FY5 2UL.

EARTH WOOD

25 players compete to be the ultimate ruler by controlling all the developed cities, either separately or with an alliance. A typical game entails several months with the first move/suitable 15 days after the month. Each player is either doing a building role or a powerful character. You can recruit more, establish and control new territories, both as changes your character's and/or other's roles, which you can spend your improved security, weapons, power, tech, defenses, and magical and other powers. You can spend your wealth on other magical and tech. You can search out enemy's weaknesses and then attempt to kill or sabotage them and/or assassinate them. There are also a few options available to a player in a turn. A turnwood is a computer moderated but the turn player's moves and actions are made through the game.

NO NEED TO LOOK THROUGH COMPLEX CHARTS AND CODE BOOKS TO UNDERSTAND THE GAME.

CRAZIEMORE'S WORLD

Europe's most popular Play By Mail game and Fantasy Campaign game with over 1000 player parties already participating.
To enter, send £5.00 for your initial trial game, game, and copy of tactical newsletter.
Further turns £1.75 each.

CAPITOL

To enter in Capitol send a £5.00 cheque to KJC Games. For this you will receive the rulebook, setup and first two turns. Each turn of Capitol costs £1.75 for the first 60 orders. Each additional 30 orders costs 10p. European players are welcome.

EARTH WOOD

To enter in Earth Wood send a £5.00 cheque to KJC Games.
For this you will receive the rulebook, setup and first three turns.
Further turns are £1.50.

KJC GAMES

Send to KJC Games, PO Box 11,
Cleveleys, Blackpool,
Lancashire FY5 2UL.

Welcome on 02531 944345

RETURN TO ARHAM

Concluding from last issue, Abner Hinklock returns to Arkham to the Old Mansion that was his home. His return brings back memories of a disreputable childhood, memories of his mysterious death. Sarah, and of hard, old Uncle Ezekiel, with his terrifyingly deformed work-winded finger!

AND YET, INSTEAD OF SHUDDERING AND SCREAMING AS HE HAD SHUDDERED AND SCREAMED THEN, NOW HE ONLY SMILES HIS MATH-LESS SMILE.

AND YET AGAIN OLD EZEKIEL HAD BEEN RIGHT, FOR DESPITE HIS HIDEOUS FINGERS HE WAS LEAST DIFFERENT OF ALL. ARNER HAD THOUGHT HE MIGHT BE ABNORMALLY NORMAL FOR A WHILE, AND HAD RUN AWAY BECAUSE HE WAS NORMAL. BUT AS TIME PASSED...

THE SNOW IS DEEPER NOW AND ARNER LEAVES A CLEAR TRAIL AS HE ENTERS THE WOODS. THE LINE OF PRINTS IS SHARP AS THE MOON SILVERES THE TREES. THE RIGHT FOOT HAS LEFT THE CLEAN IMPRINT OF A MAN'S BOOSED FOOT. THE OTHER...?

THE OLD WHITELOCK MANSION LOOMS LARGE NOW, A GIBBOS MOON BLOATING BEHIND IT AND LENDING THE CROWDING OAKS THE ASPECT OF BENT, LICKERING MONSTERS.

ARNER BRUSHES ASIDE CLINGING CREEPERS AND CLIMBS THE SNOW-SUMED STEPS TO THE MASSIVE DOOR. HE REACHES OUT A HAND TO KNOCK... BUT THE DOOR CREAKS OPEN OF ITS OWN ACCORD!

WITHIN, HE MAKES HIS WAY THROUGH DIM AND COBWEBBY CORRIDORS TOWARD EZEKIEL'S OLD HUGE ROOM. CANDLES, STRATEGICALLY PLACED, LIGHT HIS WAY.

THEN —

HE PAUSES BEFORE A DOOR WHICH STANDS AJAR. HE HESITATES BEFORE CONTINUING. FOR THIS WAS THE ROOM WHERE THEY HAD LOCKED SARAH WHEN SHE WAS SIX. HAD SHE PASSED ON THEN?

ABNER GROWS ANGRY AT THE THOUGHT

HE SNARLS AND HIS JAWS OPEN, OPEN, OPEN — IMPOSSIBLY! BUT NO, HE MUST CONTROL HIMSELF — AT LEAST UNTIL HE STANDS FACE TO FACE WITH EZEKIEL...

AND AT LAST HE ARRIVES AT THE DOOR TO THE OLD MAN'S ROOM, PUSHES IT OPEN, ENTERS.

EZEKIEL SITS THERE, AS HE ALWAYS SAT, EXCEPT HE IS VERY, VERY OLD NOW. HIS RHEUMY EYES OPEN INTO SLITS AND SEE ABNER, STANDING THERE. THEY OPEN WIDER, FROM MERE SLITS TO FERAL YELLOW GAPS IN HIS WRINKLED LEATHER FACE.

ON THE ARM OF HIS CHAIR HIS HAND — THE ONE WITH THE WORMS — LIES FLACID AND LIFELESS. THE WORMS ARE THIN, STILL, EMPTY OF LIFE. LIKE OLD, SHUCKED OFF SNAKESKINS, THE OLD MAN'S POTENCY HAS GONE.

SO YEW'VE COME BACK,
EH, ABNER?

HE SNIERS, HIS VOICE
A WHISPER

WELL, DIN'T AH TELL YEW
YEW WUD? SHUDDA PAID ME SOME MIND, BOY.

HIS VOICE IS THIN, REEDY, TIRED — LOATHSOME.
ABNER'S HATE SWELLS
WITHIN HIM.

HE MOVES HIS FOOT, HIS STRANGE FOOT, AND IT GRIPS THE WORM-EATEN CARPET IN A SUDDEN SPASM.

HE LEANS FORWARD AND REACHES FOR EZEKIEL'S
SCRAWNY NECK, AND THE OLD MAN SPEAKS AGAIN:

COME BACK TO CLAIM THE
WHITLOCK HERITAGE, EH? YEW
SHUDDA STAYED, BOY. ALL THE OTHERS'RE GONE NOW. THE OLD
'UNS, ANYHAW. YEW'D HA BIN THE BIG ONE RAOUN' THE HAUSE, ABNER...

AT LAST ABNER ANSWERS AS HIS FINGERS TIGHTEN
ABOUT THE OLD MAN'S NECK

I STILL WILL BE THE BIG ONE — WHEN YOU'RE GONE!

NO, NO —

EZEKIEL CHOKES OUT
THE WORDS

TOO LATE, ABNER.
YEW'RE... TOO...

LATE!

AS THE OLD MAN'S HEAD LOLS TO ONE SIDE, HIS GLAZED EYES BULGING, ABNER HEARS A SOUND BEHIND HIM. HIS JAWS EXPAND ENORMOUSLY AS HE WHIRLS —

AND FREEZES!

AGAIN OLD EZEKIEL WAS RIGHT. HE IS TOO LATE. SOMEONE ELSE HAS CLAIMED THE WHITLOCK HERITAGE. SOMEONE - SOMETHING! - WHO IS EVEN MORE DIFFERENT. WHOSE DIFFERENCES ARE REACHING TO ENGULF HIM EVEN NOW...

SOMETHING WITH SAUCE T
LITTLE SARAH'S FACE —

—ALMOST!

END

Journey across the light years exploring the uncharted systems of the frontier, amid the exotic environments of alien worlds; Be a part of the new age in:

TRAVELLER: 2300

Traveller 2300- Earth 300 years after the cataclysm of the Third World War. Earth's nations have colonies among the stars. First contact happened long ago, and commerce with alien intelligence is now commonplace. But exploration still goes on! The conquest of the stars has just begun.

Playable realism: Many games which are realistic can't be played, most playable games aren't terribly realistic. Traveller: 2300 is both, balancing exquisite detail with simple, accurate game systems.

The heart of Traveller: 2300 is the task resolution system. Rules cover all aspects of conflict resolution from arguments to all-out battles. Detailed Character Generation, Starship Operations and Combat, Economics, and over 700 stars in over 500 systems on a 22" X 25" full colour map, documented in a separate catalogue.

Traveller: 2300 includes complete rules for science fiction role playing, a complete full colour map of everything within 50 light years of Sol, with accompanying stellar data and an introductory adventure set on mankind's frontier. Traveller: 2300 - State-of-the-art science fiction role playing.
£14.95 $20.00

Also available from GDW:

Traveller: £8.95 $ 13.00
Book 4: Mercury: £4.45 $ 6.00
Book 5: High Guard: £4.45 $ 6.00
Book 6: Scouts: £4.45 $ 6.00
Book 7: Merchant Prince: £4.45 $ 6.00
Book 8: Robots: £4.45 $ 6.00
Alien Module 7: Hivers: £4.95 $ 7.00

Twilight: 2000: £14.95 $ 18.00
Armies of the night: £4.95 $ 7.00
Allegheny Uprising: £4.95 $ 7.00
Air Lords of Clans: £4.95 $ 7.00

For details of these and other GDW products, or the address of your nearest stockist in Europe, send to:

GAMES OF LIVERPOOL LTD.,
89 Victoria Street,
Liverpool L1 6DG.

CHILL™

ROLE PLAYING GAME

£9.95

Fear runs down your spine like ice water. Pressing your shoulder more firmly against the door of the rotting cottage, you hope that your strength can prevail against the beast that hunts you. It lurks somewhere outside - waiting watching. If only someone else had been sent out into the night, into the swamp to battle the creature...

CREATURE FEATURE

£7.45

CONTAINS: PART I The Creature Feature Game
YOU play the creatures in this weird Chill variant. Play a vampire, werewolf or mummy!

PART II New Combat rules for Chill

PART III New Stunts on S.A.V.E. - new skills, new equipment and the modern S.A.V.E. organisation.

Trade enquiries to:

GAMES OF LIVERPOOL

89 Victoria Street,

Liverpool L1 6DG.

Tel: 051-236 2605

BLACK MOON MANOR

BLACK MOON MANOR is a hair raising adventure board game of terror and suspense. But beware:

With each game, the Manor changes; you must build the house as you play. (Be careful! A foolish mistake may trap you forever...)

The creature changes too: 16 different fiends - all of them deadly - haunt the Black Moon estate.

Most terrifying of all, you can trust no one. Your companions may suddenly become enemies... your enemies the only hope of survival.

This box contains everything you need to play. A full colour board in 48 movable sections, a rule folder, and 2 high-quality two sided dice.

The gate is open wide; why don't you and your friends come inside? £12.95

WABBIT WAMPAGE- The adventure board game where you can be a rabbit gone berserk, an angry Farmer Brown or even a dog with a chainsaw. Contains full colour game board, 70 playing pieces and two 10-sided dice. £12.95

WABBIT'S WEVENOE - The adventure board game where Wambo Wabbit comes to close down the local fur trade. Contains full colour board, 70 playing pieces, 46 cards and two 10 sided dice. £12.95

TIMEMASTER - The role-playing game where you can become a time traveller. Contains 64-page Travellers Manual, 32-page guide to the continuum, 148-page adventure, 148 back-printed counters, large full-colour map and three 12 sided dice. £9.95

Discover the true power of the elements and you will find nature as deadly a foe as any monster.

Companion volume to the Dungeoneer's Survival Guide, the new AD&D® Wilderness Survival Guide is the complete reference work for the realms beneath the sun.

With new and expanded rules covering terrain, weather and a guide to campaign mapping, the Wilderness Survival Guide adds a whole new dimension to the wilderness adventure.

TSR, Inc.
PRODUCTS OF YOUR IMAGINATION™

Advanced Dungeons & Dragons WILDERNESS SURVIVAL GUIDE

TSR Inc.
POB 756
Lake Geneva
WI 53147

TSR UK Limited
The Mill
Rathmore Road
CAMBRIDGE
CB1 4AD